The position of the colored people in Canada will ultimately be the same as that of their white fellow citizens. A perfect equality among the people of different nations in this country is the will of God, hence positively certain. Whatever prejudice may say and do—God is on our side, and will aid us! Our position in and relations to the country will help to bring about such a result. The increasing influence of our piety, our intelligence, and wealth, will fix the fact irrevocably. Our children will as certainly seek and find their level, which will be the white boys and girls of their generation, as water finds its level and wind its equilibrium! Though such a result is morally certain, yet naturally, the colored men and women, among us, can do much to hasten or retard it, by the influence of their example. Our children should be inspired to hope to see such a day, by our charity, our union, and progress! The weal of our country, the happiness of our race, and the glory of Christ depend, in no little degree upon the coming of that day, and for it may we live and consecrate our all! The concomitant parts of that virtue, that secures such an end, are industry, knowledge, and morality; hence the colored men of our country should possess good farms, and cultivate them properly, or the mechanic art, and use it, or the professions, as ministers of religion, as doctors, or lawyers, &c. Our churches must be kept up, and made places of piety, of usefulness, and attraction. Our secular and Sabbath schools must not be allowed to go down, nor fail to accomplish the ends for which they were established—the intellectual and moral improvement of our children and youth. Such school will give a relish for higher attainments, and prepares the way for acquirements, in legal lore, in natural science, and the knowledge of God, which will secure, for them, places of honor, of trust, and emolument. The nature of our children and the spirit of the age demand so much, and it is for parents to say, whether such demand shall be met with manful resolve, and a pious determination! The school libraries are great auxiliaries, in the bringing about the final result. They should be freely used by the aged and young, and where there is no library, one should be got up immediately. Reading clubs, and literary associations are fellow helpers in the good cause, and no city, town, or settlement, should be without them. Innocent amusements, the numerous moral concerts, and the intellectual feasts, and fatteningss of the lecture room, will aid "the good time coming." Such things give the same inclination to the mind of the colored youth, as they do to that of the white one. Their minds being cast in the same moulds, if the features of one are admired, those of the other must be also! Such things elevate, and dignify the character of the aged and young, of the black, and the white. These things exist, among us, in common, for the white and colored people. If they be equally used, by both classes, the result must be the SAME, since mind is mind. God brought our people here, to enjoy these blessings, and so they are doing and will continue to do; hence PERFECT EQUALITY MUST BE THE ULTIMATE RESULT! The future of the colored Canadians is clear! Let our people look calmly at this subject till they lose sight of themselves, and be humbled in view of their obligation to their posterity, and the world. Let them not forget that their example will be the greatest influence that they can exert in the premises. As it will be, so will be the condition of their children, in the next generation! BRETHREN, GOD, YOUR CHILDREN, AND COUNTRY EXPECT MUCH FROM YOU!!

The Meeting of the Fobbers.

We were in Chatham, on Wednesday week, and attended the meeting at night of the "Fobbers," or perhaps, we better say Dodgers. There was some dodging, and no mistake! There is reason to believe, that the fellows, who are afraid of white faces, are afraid also of black ones! The real object of the meeting was, it seems, to call Rev. J. H. Young, and "Capt." J. C. Brown to account for taking upon themselves to send out an Agent to collect funds to enable the Committee to obtain legal advice about Dawn, and to file the bill in Chancery against the original Trustees, for non-performance of their duty, &c. Well, these gentlemen were there, and answered for themselves—and such a backing out you never did see! We could not get the object of the meeting stated fairly by a single one of its getters up; indeed, the good gunner—the main mover in the matter, who was expected to shoot right at the mark, and tear the game to pieces, by every body, did not dare appear on the field, when he heard the fowls were plenty!—having passed through a College, as the Jack A down the road, we certainly looked for him to be present, since, he positively must have learned enough, to enable him, to take aim, and pull the trigger, if he could not hit the crocodile!

There was a right good will, in the dodgers to do something to aid, and comfort the white and black mendicants of Judas notoriety! Is secret Associations to be promoted by such humbugs? We tell such Orders, that if they allow certain ones of their fraternity, to put forth efforts to sustain villians, who should not be countenanced by a decent set of infidels, then verily their organization must come to naught. There are many of such Orders, who are good men, and they will no doubt oppose their own brethren, who are fanatics, and determined to uphold a brother, right or wrong, and if God will help us, we will help the good in opposing the bad! We put in a word, during the meeting. We assure them that Capt. J. C. Brown was right, in informing the public that the debts of the Dawn Institute were paid BEFORE "Daddy Joe" went to England, as far as the Trustees and Executive Committee were concerned. We assure them that Bro. John—ought not to be believed on oath! for he was guilty of uttering falsehood publicly, which WE COULD PROVE! and that their distinguished fellow-citizen, John Crow, Esq., before he died, had given us a document, signed in the presence of B. F. Barefoot, Esquire, the Postmaster, at Chatham, and witnessed by Thomas Bell, Esquire, of the same place, giving the LIE to him!—We assured them that the money begged for Dawn, in England, of late, was got under false pretences, for the Trustees did not send "Daddy Joe," to get it. nor authorized Bro. John to help him; for there were but six Trustees, at first,—and that J. C. Fuller was dead—Mr. Stover had (before he went) resigned, and that Mr. Roat denied doing so, in a public meeting, and that Bro. George Johnson had made affidavit before Jas. Smith, Esq., that he did not send him, and that Bro. J. C. Brown had also made affidavit before Mr. Justice McKeller that he did not, and as there was but one more Trustee—it was clear, that THE TRUSTEES did not send him, &c.! Hence the article also in the Appendix of Josiah Henson's Life is false. It was written by Bro. John, as we have been informed, by good authority. Here it is:—"The Trustees of the Institute have requested its old and tried friend, and their much-esteemed fellow-laborer, Mr. JOSIAH HENSON, to proceed to England for the purpose of collecting funds to pay off debts, which have been unavoidably contracted, and to carry into effect the intended improvements, rendered absolutely necessary to meet the growing wants of the population, now rapidly accumulating in Canada West." The case is a very clear one. Let the people look out that they be not still further deceived, by the mendicant of Dawn! SEBASTOPOL has fallen, and our flag is on the MALAKOFF! and we hope the war is about to be closed in the West, between the 'BLACK SAXONS' and DAWNITES! However, if Prince Gortschacoff (Henson) and his Master—Alexander (Scoble), are not satisfied, we are ready again to draw the sword, and we assure them, the next time, we will put it on up to the hilt. We assured the meeting also, that all the loose property belonging to Dawn, that fell into the hands of "The Free Mission Baptists," in our opinion would not have brought Twenty five Pounds, or, in other words, we would not have given that for it, &c., and that an inventory was taken of it, and it could be had when needed, &c. And we told them, that we had been informed, that the people were urging the "Executive Committee" to send out an Agent to get money, and that they were ready to give it, &c. We hope the Agent may be sent forth to aid our indefatigable—fellow-helper, Miss M. A. SHADD, as she has so much to do. On the whole, the Dodgers seemed satisfied.

It is a matter of no little joy to us, to see the real manhood there is among our people, and how much self-respect they do possess! The shame and backing out of the getters up of the meeting, indicated that most beautifully. They had been led to take side with a bad cause, they saw, ignorantly, and they gave up like men, with apparent repentance. Thank God for it! May such honesty ever characterize our people! We shall always honor those gentlemen for their manly back out!

We have entertained the opinion that a Slaveholder in heart, could not be a Christian; hence, we have always refused to fellowship them as such. We doubt very much whether one even sustaining the relation of a slaveholder can be a Christian, yet charity would lead us to hope that it is possible! If it be possible, we think it is the case with Mr. Luke, the writer of the following letter. The letter must be a severe rebuke to the hypocritical ministers of religion, of this and every country, who refuse to say even one word against the sin of slavery. We hope the letter will be read with care and pondered well! Don't forget where it came from, and who wrote it! Success to the Convention and the paper that advocates it! Allow us to say to our readers that we regard the Daily and Weekly News of Kentucky, as one of the best Anti-Slavery papers in the United States. It gives you Anti-Slavery news of the right kind and from the right place!

Slavery Question in Kentucky.

The Right Move From a Slaveholder.

A Call for a Convention of the Slaveholders in Kentucky, to meet at Frankfort.

Hon. Wm. H. W Luke, a Slaveholder in this county, writes the following letter in answer to an invitation from Anti-Slavery men, who own slaves, to draw up a plan for the abolition of Negro Slavery in Kentucky. Mr. Luke is a philanthropist, a noble-man and hero: he speaks out openly and frankly, and does honor to slaveholders.

To the Editor of the Daily and Weekly News.

FLOUR CREEK, Sept. 12 '55.

DEAR SIR:—In your News of the 10th, there is a request or proposition made by some of the Slaveholders of the State of Kentucky, that they, (the Slaveholders) hold a Convention in the city of Frankfort; the time hereafter to be designated, that your judgments deems most fitting, to adopt some plan for the abolition of Slavery, or the gradual removal of the same; and that "Wm. H. W. Luke, of Pendleton County (Campbell County Kentucky it should be) be appointed by the friends of the said Convention to draw up a proposition, as one in this part of the state, for the gradual abolition of the same; and that it be hereafter published in the Weekly News."

I feel honored by the call made upon me by some of my fellow citizens of Kentucky, as being considered competent for the arduous task they assign me, of drawing up and presenting to an honorable body of men, thus drawn together from all parts of this State of bright and clouded intellects, a proposition of such vast magnitude, fraught with such inestimable blessings to the born and unborn millions of my fellow men, of this my own and loved Kentucky, and these United States. A proposition for the gradual abolition of negro Slavery, and I might say of white also, if not too revolting, if received, carried out, and fully acted upon, will result in so much renown, peace and interest; not only to this my adopted State, but to the proud republic of America and the world. I go for EQUAL RIGHTS—EQUAL FREEDOM and EDUCATION TO ALL MEN, black or white. A judicious scheme to abolish Slavery, hated word, would be a blessing. Slavery, like its author, sin, cannot be execrated, too much, nor driven too soon, by REASON and argument, forever from our beloved State, and country; yea, from the face of the whole world. None else but devils, sin, tyrants, and the proud oppressor of his fellow man originated it, and none else but tyrants filled with avarice and cupidity, will say it shall exist. I concur with Washington, Madison, Webster, and the illustrious Henry Clay, [though dead, yet trumpet tongued speaketh] that if some judicious, wise, and feasible scheme could be devised for the monster evil of Slavery, this republic would be the palladium of liberty—the Prince of Nations! O let not the boasted "asylum of the oppressed" become the home of Tyrants and a land of Slaves! Should we not extend protection to the banished Indian, release the negro, and open our arms to the embrace of the poor emigrant, fleeing from the grasp of Tyrants?

The time has come that men hate slavery and love freedom. The crisis is at hand; our country "THE RIGHTS OF MAN," socially and politically, demand a repeal of every hated enactment of law that has caused a chain to be thrown around the necks of our fellow man, debasing their intellect and brutalizing their person. Common sense, reason, and existing circumstances, speak aloud to Heaven, calling for a redress of the great evil of Slavery! Sir, I stand prepared to draw up, with the concurrence of others that may be appointed in different parts of this State, friendly to a Convention for the abolition of slavery, a scheme of gradual or progressive emancipation or abolition of negro slavery in Kentucky, and hope that the slaveholders of this State, and of the United States, and every man and woman that has a spark of love of LIBERTY may unite with us in the great undertaking. I am ready whenever the friends of a Convention for freedom, may direct (God, our State and country being our helpers) for the arduous but righteous task, of drawing up and presenting to a Convention of FREEMEN SLAVEHOLDERS, (a singular coincidence of my adopted State) a scheme differing from all past schemes, for the great and entire down fall of slavery. One that will redound to the glory and honor of this State, my country and the world. This Convention will save the union, and drive back war, bloodshed, anarchy and confusion, and perpetuate this proud republic, and make her one and indevisable for ages to come. No North—No South—No disunion shall be heard in all this troubled land.

I would, if some judicious scheme could be devised for the abolition of slavery (and that there can be, there is no doubt) rather part with any interest I have or may ever have in slaves, and let my State and country be united and free, than fill a throne; than wield the proudest sceptre in the world. Freedom, is the sweetest name in the Universe to all but tyrants: it makes the oppressed leap for joy; and head erect, announce, "I AM A MAN! I AM FREE! Thrilling word to me that never knew oppression; how much more so to the slave to be bid "GO FREE."—To prepare a scheme and to present it, will now depend upon the Convention of the Slaveholders at Frankfort, and the time they may (with the lovers of freedom) direct. For one, I am ready, sincerely hoping a Convention may be called. The place, Frankfort, the time not distant; and that the deliberations of the Convention and its acts may lead to the downfall of slavery, and the prosperity of this Union, is my sincere prayer.

Your sincere friend,

WM. H. W. LUKE.

Newspaper Subscribers.

The following classification of newspaper subscribers we take from the Prairie Farmer, and from our own experience we can safely say that the picture is drawn as natural as life itself. First come the UPRIGHTS.—These are men who take newspapers, pay for them and read them,—observe the order in which these things are done. The pay comes first—the reading next. These men consider they get the worth of their money in the bargain. It seems as fair and just to them that the newspaper should be paid for, as a barrel of sugar or a new coat. They never entertain any other opinion. When the year runs out, or a little before, they are on hand with the pay. There is no more difficulty with the remembering this period, than Sunday of the first January. If one of them wishes to stop his paper, he either calls, or writes a letter by his postmaster, in due season, like a man. This class is dear to the heart of the editor. Their image is embalmed in his warm affections. May they live a thousand years, and see their son's sons of the fourth generation. The second class now in mind is the

DO WELLS—this class is nearly related to the other—so near that it is hard to tell where one begins and the other ends. These men always pay in advance in the beginning, and intend to do so continually. But memory fails a little—sometimes for quite a period. But their recollection, though nodding occasionally, never gets sound asleep. It pronounces the word in due time—'The printer is not paid,' and forthwith their will to do well kindles into activity. Now comes the paying up. Meant to do so before. Don't mean to let such things pass by.' A publisher can live with such men. They have a warm place in the memory—only a little back of the uprights. If such a man dies in arrears, his wife's son remembers that he may not have paid up for his newspaper, and forthwith institutes inquiries. They remember that part of the benefit was theirs, and, estate or no estate, see that the printer's bills are not among the unsettled accounts. Next come the EASY DOERS—These men believe in newspapers. They have fully settled it in their mind that a newspaper is a good thing. They take them too. Sometimes at first they lay up for the first year—at any rate they mean to pretty soon. If they have done so, they sit down with the comforting conviction that their newspaper is now settled for, and this idea having once got into their heads, refuses obstinately to be dislodged, but keeps its hold from year to year—a truth once—now an illusion, gray and rheumatic with years. The editor, marking the elongated and elongating space, in the account current of their dollars, begins to ask if they are dead or have gone to California. Now he begins to poke bills at them. They suddenly start up at the reading that they are in the arrears, and like men—as they are at the bottom, pay up. They never dispute his bills—they know books tell better stories than moss-covered memories. If the publisher has faith enough, or a long purse, and can live like a harbernating bear, he may survive this class. But if he is mortal only, woe be to him. The next class is that of the

DOWN HILLERS—Here we begin to ride over to the other side. The picture suddenly gets sombre. We shall despatch the down hillers suddenly. One of these may take a paper because his wife wants one, or the children are zealous to read it, or a neighbour persuades him. When it begins to come, he dismisses all thoughts about it further. If the editor sends a man directly to him at the end of two or three years, he may get some pay for his paper, but with growls and surly looks. He never pays any debts if he can get rid of it, and a newspaper least of all. Still he hates law suits and constables, and all that. A dun has the effect on him that a bullet does on a hippopotamus—glancing from his hide, or sinking into the blubber harmless. He is always sliding down hill, and soon merges into another class—that of

THE NIX CUM ROUSE.—No matter how this man began his subscriptions, he never pays for it—not he. He don't like that sort of paper. It don't give no news. He never did like it. He didn't want it in the first place, and told the postmaster so. He sent back one more than a year ago—besides, he never began to take it till a long time after it came, and he hadn't had only two or three of them at any rate, and those he hadn't read.' Wipe him off. Here comes the.

SCAPE GRACE.—It is enough to say of him that he never fails to have a newspaper—two or three of them. When he thinks they have come about long enough for the publisher to want pay, he sends back with 'stop it.' Or he takes up his quarters and leaves for parts unknown. He does not want to pay and he don't mean to. Get it if you can. Enough for him.

☞ Our 'Rond Eau' correspondent, H., informs us that the folks of his neighborhood have been making good roads in their section of country. We are glad to hear it, as such are greatly needed in many parts of Western Canada. We regret the fact, that the people, old and young, males and females, in the town of H., generally are so wicked, as to use such profane language as he refers to. We hope they will not forget that it is written: "Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain," &c. We are glad to learn that so many of the colored gentlemen and ladies of Chatham had such a pleasant time of it, during their fishing frolic on the lake. The wickedness of some white folks, at Blenheim, is to be regretted. They are unworthy of notice!

Fatal Accident.

We are sorry to learn, by a letter from a friend, that Isaac Fullerton, of West Chester, Pa., met with an accident on the 4th of October, which caused instant death. The circumstances are as follows: Mr. Fullerton, it appears, was out on a gunning excursion on the line of the West Chester Railroad, two miles north of the town, in company with a number of scholars belonging to Anthony Bolmar's Boarding School, when a flock of partridges flew up; all were anxious to get a shot. Fullerton stepped forward, and the party fired, when the load of one of the guns in the hands of a French lad took effect in the back part of his neck, and passed out of his mouth; he fell, with the gun in his hand, and died instantly. The young man who caused the sad affair, followed the body home, and was much grieved, and went to the proper authorities and gave himself up. Mr. Fullerton was an intelligent young man; he leaves a wife and five small children to lament his untimely end. The funeral took place on the 6th, inst., at the Grove Burying Ground, and was attended by a large number of relatives and friends.

FIRE.

On Wednesday evening last, the stable attached to the Royal Exchange, of this Town, was consumed by fire. Firemen were soon on the ground, and rendered all the aid in their power, but as the stable contained a considerable quantity of hay, it was very soon in flames. Mr. Pritchard's carriage horses were in the stable at the time, but they were got out before they sustained any injury. The cause of the fire is unknown.—

A Nantucket whaling vessel has discovered a new island in the South Pacific Ocean. It is situated about two hundred and fifty miles south of Desolation Island, and the ship which encountered it took from it, in less than a week's time, 400 barrels of sea-elephant oil. Two other ships are said to be now in course of preparation to return thither, for the purpose of profiting by this valuable discovery.

NOTHING LIKE LEATHER.

IF YOU WOULD BE RICH,

Read this, and save your Penny.

GOOD morrow, friend—I'm a stranger in your borough, can you inform me where I can get a pair of good boots made?"

"Yes, sir, I can; just go to T. W. WILSON'S, King St. East, Chatham, next to Smith's Grocery; that's the place; he'll accommodate you most satisfactorily."

"Well, how is your judgment in regard to the quality of boots and shoes?"

"Most excellent—I'm an old boot and shoe maker; many are the days that I've drawn the cords."

"Where did you say I could find him?"

"Why, the next door to Mr. Andrew Smith's Grocery, corner of King and William Streets, East,—any person can tell you."

"Will you conduct me there?"

"I will with pleasure; for I know him to be, from experience, one of the best manufacturers of BOOTS AND SHOES in town. His stock is of his own manufacture, and he has always on hand a superior quality for gentlemen's wear. He's also very particular in getting up his work; so I'm confident he can't fail to give reasonable satisfaction to those who favor him with their patronage."

"There are some boot makers whose work is beautiful to the eye, but plaguy pinching to the feet; and I have lumps upon each instep, which in foul weather give me excruciating pain."

"Ah, yes, too much have I suffered by fetters from the boot moulders hands; but he's not one of them; he endeavours to make a systematic fit, measuring from joint to heel, and from lump to toe—closely observing the most minute protuberance, if there be any upon the feet; and he seldom fails to make his boots set as easy thereon as a glove upon a lady's tender finger. Besides, he always keeps a superior stock on hand; perhaps you might obtain a pair upon the instant, that would fit your feet and please the eye."

"Then I must try him."

"Try him, of course, and you'll save at each end of your bargain. First—you'll buy cheaper—secondly, your boots will wear you longer."

"Come, let's go."

"I'm ready—Are you a cash man?"

"I am; for he who pays cash clips the discount of credit, and secures it in his own pocket."

"Then that's the place, for his motto reads"—

Ask of me no trust, when you come to buy;
Ask of me no trust, for you I must deny;
Ask of me no trust, it hath destroyed many;
Ask of me no trust, I cannot grant you any;
Ask of me no trust, but with your cash rally;
Ask of me no trust, nor with my pocket dally.

A MORE "IMPORTANT NOTICE!"

American Tract Society—Slavery.

THE Independent, of New York, in an article in that paper, of the 15th March, being one of a continuation of articles regarding the "American Tract Society," has this sentence:—"For thirty years, one of the greatest institutions of Evangelical Christendom, has been testifying in effect, that the institution of Slavery, the buying and selling of human beings, and the profession of the slave-trader, are less offensive to God, less contary to the Gospel, less perilous to the souls of men, than the practice of dancing. It has attempted to exhibit and authenticate, on the widest scale, an administration of Christianity, in which there shall be no more syllable of rebuke for crimes that shock the morals sense of Christendom. The influence of the Tract Society has tended to make the Southern churches more timid and cowed in the presence of the imperious slave-trading interest. As a consequence of this policy—partly, but not exclusively—behold the SOUTHERN APOSTACY!"

In December 1814, a report of "The" Committee of the Synod of New York and New Jersey, on the subject of the mutilations of books by the American Tract Society," was published; and in that report, the mutilations and omissions in the editions published, by that Society, of D'Aubigne's History of the Great Reformation, were pointed out—besides, there are the omissions and expurgations in other books published, as to the vile sin of Slavery, and the substitution of sentences other than the original.

The notice by me entitled, "Publications," referable to these matters, has been widely circulated, and a Canadian public are again reminded of their duty.

A HISTORY OF ALL NATIONS,

FROM THE

EARLIEST PERIODS TO THE PRESENT TIME;

OR

UNIVERSAL HISTORY:

IN WHICH THE HISTORY OF EVERY NATION, ANCIENT AND MODERN, IS SEPARATELY GIVEN

Illustrated by 70 Stylographic Maps and 700 Engravings

By S. G. GOODRICH,

AUTHOR OF 'PICTORIAL GEOGRAPHY OF THE WORLD,' 'PARLEY'S CABINET LIBRARY,' 'PARLEY'S TALES,' &c.

Complete in one imperial octavo volume, of more than twelve hundred pages of double column letter-press; and upwards of seven hundred elegant illustrations.

It is believed that a Universal History, suitable in form, extent, and arrangement, to the wants of the mass of American readers, has never been presented to the public. For this reason, and in compliance with numerous suggestions from those entitled to respect, the author has undertaken the formidable task of supplying one of a popular character and for general use.

A reader of history should always have, in mind two things—viz., the place where, and the time when, an event happened. In the present work therefore, the greography of each country whose history is carefully given; and to aid the reader seventy stylographic maps have been added. Careful attention, also, has been paid to Chronology, so that, at every page and every chapter, the reader may find the dates of the events which are described

In order to avoid the confusion which inevitably arises from embracing the whole history of mankind in a general chronological view, the author has adopted an ethnographic arrangement, by which he presents each nation separately. The advantages of this plan for a popular treatise, are obvious. The mind of the reader is not overtasked by a boundless extent of view, nor bewildered by a perplexing multiplicity of objects. On the contrary, everything is clear and distinct. Events, instead of being forced out of their true place and connection, are presented in easy and natural succession, thus imparting to the work the attraction and interest of continuous narrative. Another advantage of the plan is, that it not merely admits, but invites descriptive details, illustrative anecdotes, personal adventures and sketches of character, all of which serve not only to give life and effect to the pages of the historian, but to impart the colors of truth and reality to the pictures he may present.

While the work thus presents a separate and distinct history, and also exhibits the present state of every nation, ancient and modern, including the recent revolutions in Europe, still, for the purpose of showing how nations have acted upon or influenced the destinies of one another, General Views are given, at suitable periods, presenting the great movement of mankind, as one family, in its onward march from the past to the present time.

It is proper to state, that while the author promises only a compilation, yet he has endeavored to choose from the highest and best authorities; and while the work is offered as a popular treatise, it still seeks to present the practical results of philosophic investigation; and finally, that while justice is rendered to the classic ages, the whole work is written in the spirit of modren civilization—which places justice above power, prefers peace to war, and regards the Christian, rather than the soldier, as the true hero of our race.

The work is illustrated with 700 engravings, designed rather for instruction than mere embellishment. Presenting views of cities, monuments, coins, medals, portraits, weapons of war, vehicles for travelling, dress, religious rites and the manners and customs of ancient and modern times.

With a view to render it more valuable, especially in the family library, an ample chronological table is given, with a full index—containing upwards of four thousand historical and geographical names;—thus rendering it a CYCLOPEDIA OF HISTORY, and UNIVERSAL GAZETTEER, available, for daily and familiar use, as a book of reference.

The work is in one impeial octavo volume, containing 1200 royal 8vo. pages, in double columns, and embraces as much printed matter as six or eight octavo volumes of ordinary extent.

AND IS BROUGHT DOWN TO THE YEAR 1854.

The following is a notice of it from the Boston Post:

"Of the excellence and character of the compilation we have heretofore spoken, and can, therefore, do little more at present than to repeat ourselves. Not only the philosophy of history, but geology, geography, and astronomy, are discussed, at reasonable length, in the introductory chapters. Then comes a very interesting essay on physical and political geography, followed by a paper on the antediluvian and patriarchal ages. To this succeeds the history of Asia and Africa, from the earliest period to the present time. Then succeeds, in order, the history of Europe and America. In every respect this "Universal History" is to be commended as a useful compilation. For students, as well as for the general reader, it must prove highly attractive. The illustrations answer every purpose, and really illustrate the text. Although called a "history," and thereby ranked by some people with many a drowsy volume, we can assure our readers that they will scarcely find a more readable book, than this under notice. The compiler is neither dull nor tedious. He does his work briefly and clearly, and, in addition to the historical facts, gives many curious anecdotes and statements regarding the manners, customs, social life, religion, government, costume, sports, amusements and employments, of the different nations of the earth. We advise people to look at the publication. It is just the thing for the general reader, being neither deep, nor verbose, nor stupid. It it a compilation made with taste and skill, as well as with patience and labor."

Certificates.

Without professing myself a believer in all varied departments of Phrenology, a Science to which I have given little or no attention, I yet have pleasure in acknowledging that, myself and family having submitted to an examination at the request of Mr. Persons, he gave us, and that with great readiness, as far as I can judge, a very truthful description of our characters. Conscious defects were pointed out. Those faculties which needed cultivation, and those that had been improved and developed by particular pursuits of studies were named, in cases where he could not have known what these were.

As Mr. P. professes his belief in the atonement of Christ as the only ground of acceptance with God, and in the necessity of the influences of the Holy Spirit to regenerate the soul and to enable us to improve what is defective in us, and in the hope that it may be his object to become practically acquainted with thest truths nimself, and to cause their influence to be felt in his teachings, I trust that he will meet with success in his classes.

This is to certify that the Bearer, Wm. Persons, is deeply imbued with the spirit and doctrines of Phrenology, has attended my lectures, and read my works; that he has a first rate natural talent for prosecuting this science, that I strongly recommend him, while examining his head, and before I knew him, to follow this science as a permanent profession; that I recommend him to the public as talented and worthy of patronage, and think him calculated to do good.

Exhibitions and Lectures.

THE Undersigned proposes exhibiting the Diorama of Uncle Tom's Cabin, in the principal Cities, Towns, and Villages in the Northern States and Canada: and to accompany them with abundant evidence as to the truthfulness of the facts assumed by the author, in the work known by that name, which will include the recital of some most mysterious and thrilling incidents in the history of his own family. The flight of his parents for freedom—their capture, and return to slavery and their second flight; a history of their lost boys, who were stolen and sold into slavery—the death of one of them, and the redemption of the other by the purchae of himself; and the final purchase for the enormous sum of five thousand dollars.

The paintings, comprising the scenes of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," are the production of an eminent French artist, and show as large as life, and represent the most prominent scenes and characters in the work.

In order to render our labors more effectual and create more general interest and benefit, we propose the following arrangements, viz:—To give one half of the receipts to any Church or Society, or regularly appointed committee by the puplic, who will provide a place, secure an audience, and defray the expenses incident to the meeting.

An arrangement by which every Church or Society in the country may replenish their funds, aid their pastors, or whatever other benevolent object that commends itself to public patronage.

Let such then who would help the cause, help themselves, and help us in our feeble endeavours to enlist the public ear to the cries of bleeding humanity; go at once to work, communicate immediately with us preparatory to an exhibition.

We shall not however confine ourselves to that deplorable and humiliating aspect of the colored man's case, repesented in that work.

But we promise at no distant date, a new programme of very different scenes, representing not only an entirely original, but a far more hopeful aspect of the black man, than has ever been presented to the American public.

It is neither egotism, nor yet flattery, in us to say that this mode of giving instruction possesses the double merit of engaging those two most important faculties that man possesses—the mind and the sight at the same time, and making an ineffacable impression. It is not as being necessarily dependent and degraded, then that, we shall confine our exhibitions of his character.

There have been places where, and times when the black man of modern times has proven himself the patriot, the statesman, and the warrior. As such, then, let him be known to the world, that it may acknowledge it, and to our youth, that they may imitate their example and copy their virtues.

We suffer more perhaps, from false representation, than all other ills put together.

Those amongst us who have acted the part of patriot are represented to be vicious and ungovernable: and those whom the most direful and crushing prejudices have debarred from the opportunities for higher development are represented as submissive willing underlings. Generation after generation are stamped with the same false impressions, and learn to assume it on the one hand, and regard it as a fixed inevitable fact on the other.

We are arranging a new and a very extensive programme of Distinguished Colored Men and the incidents with which they have been connected and acquitted themselves honorably—such as ATTICUS, "the first martyr of the Revolution," the "Colored Regiments at the Battle of New Orle

Poetry.

A Story of School.

BY W. B. HART.

The red light shone through the open door,
From the round declining sun;
And fantastic shadows all about
On the dusty floor were thrown,
As the factory clock told the hour of five,
And the school was almost done.

The mingled hum of the busy town,
Rose faint from her lower plain;
And we saw the steeple over the trees,
With its motionless, golden vane;
And heard the cattle's musical low,
And the rustle of standing grain.

In the open casement a lingering bee
Murmured a drowsy tune;
And from the upland meadows, a song,
In the lulls of the afternoon,
Had come on the air that wandered by,
Laden with the scents of June.

Our tasks were finished, and lessons said,
And we sat all hushed and still,
Listening to catch the purl of the brook,
And the whirl of the distant mill;
And waiting the word of dismissal that yet
Waited the master's will.

The master was old, and his form was bent,
And scattered and white his hair;
But his heart was young, and there ever dwelt
A calm and kindly air,
Like a halo over a pictured saint,
On his face, marked deep with care.

His eyes were closed, and his wrinkled hands
Were folded over his vest,
As wearily back in his old arm chair
He reclined as if to rest;
And the golden, streaming sunlight fell
On his brow, and down his breast.

We waited in reverent silence long,
And silence the master kept;
Though still the accustomed saintly smile
Over his features crept;
And we thought, worn with the lengthened toil
Of the summer's day, he slept.

So we quietly rose and left our seats,
And outward, into the sun,
From the gathering shades of the dusty room,
Stole silently, one by one;
For we knew, by the distant striking clock,
It was time the school was done.

And left the master sleeping alone,
Alone in his high backed chair,
With his eyelids closed, and his withered palms
Folded, as if in prayer
And the mingled light and smile on his face—
And we knew not death was there!

Nor knew that just as the clock struck five,
His kindly soul away,
A shadowy messenger silently bore
From his trembling house of clay,
To be a child with the saints of Heaven,
And to dwell with Christ alway!

Miscellaneous.

A Fern Philippic.

Who talks of New York taste! Refresh my aching eyes, oh, Philadelphia! with a sight of thy broad brims and drab bonnets. New York has gone rainbow mad. Dresses with plaids a yard square, or striped like the pennants of a ship. Ridiculous little brimless caps of bonnets, loaded with poppies, marigolds, asters, lilies, roses, wreaths, sprays, buds, blossoms, beads, gauze ribbons, plumes, lace, spangles, fringe and frippery, and infinitum. Their wearers, with forms frightfully compressed between whalebones, no sparkle in their eyes, no spring to their step, listless, ennuied, jaded, dead and-alive specimens of womanhood, utterly incapable of a new sensation.

And the men! What shall we say of them! With three exceptions there is not a handsome man in New York! Epicurean, sensuous, hirsute, winebibbing, oyster fed, cigar stupified, snake skin pantalooned pibeds—puffing smoke into ladies' faces, peeping under ladies' bonnets, and looking as though they had exhausted life before they were out of round jackets. The sight of Horace Greeley's clear, child-like face, and pure calm eyes, is as refreshing to the sight in Broadway as the first snow drop blossom in spring.

But the New York children! It makes one sigh to look at them. These men and women will soon all pass away—but the little children—they too must be bound and laid on the altar of fashion—puny, pale faced, and spindle legged, braided, be-curled, be-flounced, corseted, drilled, little sickly automatons, never surprised, never delighted, premature little old men or women. The sight of a bouncing country child, full of vitality and irrepressible life, with locks of clover and cheeks full of roses, were worth a long journey to see.

And the shops! Plenty to see but nothing to wear—plenty of glitter and no substance—all expensive, but utterly unsuitable for good sensible people as are their showy wares: be-ware as you would not lose caste, how you question the price. Nobody but a Bostonian or a Philadelphian, they say, does that!

Suffer a word of homely advice from the stranger within thy gates, oh, New York!—sell thy diamonds, and sweeten thy gutters. Set fire to thy milliner's shops and oyster shops, and oyster saloons; build fewer churches, or put more people in them. Turn thy puny, candy fed, victimized children out to grass, and place a well selected library at the disposal of thy listless, dressy wives and daughters.—N. Y Post.

The Escape for Liberty.

Extracts from the new and thrilling work, entitled 'The Rag-Picker; or, Bond and Free'—just published by Mason Brothers, 23 Park Row, New York:—

'Well, Nappo, I am going to leave you,' said Toney to the negro, one day, soon after his trouble with Beck had passed by, as they were alone at one end of the corn-field

'Whar' yer gwine, massa?' exclaimed Nappo, his great eyes enlarging as he spoke. 'Whar' yer gwine?'

'I am going to leave this State, altogether.'

'All togedder? Who gwine wid you, all togedder?'

'I mean permanently. I do not intend to come back, as I have done heretofore when I've been away.'

'W'en yer gwine, massa?'

'In a few days, now.'

Nappo hung his head, and the hoe lagged in his hands at first, and then he ceased to work entirely, but he did not speak until Toney accosted him.

'I hope, Nappo, you will get along without trouble, after I'm gone. Your fate is a harsh one—the fate of your race is hard. But your case, especially, is one that commands sympathy, because you have once tasted the sweets of liberty, and know which is preferable—freedom or bondage! I wish I were able, I would take you with me, Nappo, but I can't. I'm poor and I—I'm sorry—but I can't do it. You've been faithful to me, and faithful to your master, Brittan, under my direction. But you must bear up manfully, and remember that there is a better world than this, a bright hereafter, where we must all meet, one day, and where we shall all be upon an equal footing—the master no higher than his slave, if the servant is faithful and just to himself and his neighbor.'

'You mean up dar?' said Nappo, pointing with his dry, hard hand, heavenward.

'Yes, Nappo; we shall be all equal there.'

'W'ot—all?'

'Yes, I believe so, Nappo.'

'W'ot—Massa Britt'n, an' Beck, an' all? Ekal to me an' yer, and yer? Dey ekal ter we?'

'They will repent, I trust, seasonably, and they will be forgiven of their errors.'

'I duzzn't want ter go up dar,' said Nappo, firmly.

'What!' said Toney.

'No. Dis chile rudder not, massa. Dis chile duzzn't keer 'bout gwine up dar, ef Massa Beck an' Taskem's dar, no how!'

'You must endeavor,' continued Toney, 'now I'm going away, Nappo, to conciliate your master: and if you go along smoothly with Beck, he'll treat you better, I hope.'

'Nebber, nebber, Massa Mettler,' continued Nappo, stoutly, 'Dem men nebber'll forgib Nappo, long' dey lib; an' w'en you'se gone, dey'll 'mash his head for 'im, to pay off all de hole detts, fer sart'n. W'ar yer gwine, Massa Mettler?' asked Nappo, significantly, once more.

'To New York State, Nappo. Why?'

'Well, ef you shu'd see a poor nigger up dar, 'n he hadn't no money, ner no frens, ner nuff 'n, an' he should be tryin' to git 'way from deze cusses yere, yer wouldn't peach on 'im, wud yer, massa—eh?'

'If you ever come where I am, Nappo, I'll treat you well, and you shan't suffer. Mind! I don't advise you to run away, though.'

'Y'ere gwine ter run away, ain't yer, massa?'

'No, Nappo. I don't have to run away. I'm free to go when and where I please.'

'Wall, Massa Ellerson, yer farder, he run 'way wid Missey Annie, an' he was a free man too—eh?'

This was a home-thrust for Toney, for he had arranged every thing to 'run away' with Julie, at an early day. And though Nappo could not possibly have suspected anything of this, yet his remark fitted Toney's case exactly.

'Well, Nappo,' continued Toney, 'two wrongs don't make one right, you know. You are Master Brittan's legal property: and, though it is an unfortunate situation for you, the law requires that you should remain here. This is one wrong, and a grievous one; but submission is a virtue. Now, if you should run away from your owner, you would be taking from him just so much money as your pecuniary value amounts to; and this would be what some people denominate, stealing, or robbery, you see. So that this would be the second wrong. Now, as I said before, since two wrongs, like these I have mentioned, cannot make one right, you shouldn't be instrumental in committing one of the wrongs, although the other exists, and you are thus a victim to the injustice of it.'

Nappo was very attentive to this excellent piece of advice, though he did not comprehend the whole of it.

'I see, Mass Toney, I see,' said Nappo. 'Two wrongs nebber make one right, 'zackly on'y sometimes they do!'

'I think not, Nappo.'

'Well, massa, I tell you, den,' said Nappo, in a whisper. ''Poze I run 'way one time, an' go lib w'ile in free State, an' bimeby dem slave-cotcher, Taskem, cum an' nab poor Nappo, an take him back ter Alerbama? Dat one wrong, ain't it, massa?'

'Yes, yes.'

'Wal, den. 'Poze Nappo take good chance, w'en he kin git 'um, an' run 'way 'gin—dat two times—dat two wrongs, fer sart'n: eh, massa

'Yes,' said Toney.

'Wal, massa, den two wrongs make one right, sure's preach'n; fer,' bet your life, Massa [illegible] of dis chile git into free State [illegible] 's long's he libs! An' dat [illegible] be the right, fer sart'n—eh, Missa Mettle.?'

The force of Nappo's theory struck Toney very remarkably, though he saw that the poor slave was not altogether disinterested in his homely argument. So he said—

'Well, Nappo, I don't know exactly what you are thinking of, but I hope you'll be happy, wherever you may be situated, in the future. I'm sorry I ever came here at all, for many reasons, but I am about to quit Kentucky, and I only wish I were able to free every slave Brittan owns,' said Toney, feelingly. 'This is out of the question, however, and I must leave you all to the mercy of those who ought to be kind to you.'

'But dey nebber'll be kind to us,' said Nappo, again, 'nebber. Dey'll beat us, an' 'mash us, an' work de skin off our bones, an' den trow us to der dogs, w'en we're us't up. Dass w'ot dey'll do, massa. An 'ef yer say ye're gwine, I say I'm gwine too, ef I ken get away.'

'Well, Nappo, I musn't know anything of this, you see. If I see you, hereafter, away from your master's place, I can't help it, and shan't. When I leave him, I've done with him and his forever. As I said before, if you come where I am, I'll do what I can for you; but I don't recommend you to run away. It is a long journey to the free States, and you'd find it a weary one,' continued Toney, in a low tone.

'Yis—yis; I hear 'um, I hear 'um, massa,' said Nappo, listening attentively and excitedly, and catching every syllable that dropped from his friend's lips.

'You'd have to suffer from fasting, and you would be compelled to skulk by day, and travel by night.'

'Yis—yis, massa.'

'And then you would have a long way to walk, too, and you would be surrounded by spies and man-wolves, who would seize you, if possible, at any moment, on suspicion of being a runaway; so that you would have to be extremely cautious how you were exposed, for a single moment as you went.'

'Yis, massa!'

'And you'd have to find your way to Lewisburg—'

'Yis—'

'But you musn't enter the town, though.'

'O no—I see, massa—Lucyberg; I knows 'em.'

'And then, when you reached Green River, you'd have to sly up the valley, always keeping the course of the river up to Harpshead—but not to go into the village, you know.'

'No, no, massa—Harps'ed, I 'member him too.'

'And so on—still north, that is up—between Carthage and Henderson—'

'Yis, massa. Cartige an' Annerson. I knows dem, too.'

'Then across the Ohio river, and that'll bring you into Illinois. Keep right on, then—that is, I mean, Nappo, you would find it necessary to continue straight forward, thus, if you were there—and get upon the Wabash River.'

'Yis, Warbush; I know 'im, massa. Dass w'ar de big Injuns lib; I know.'

'And then you would have to seek for the town of Vincennes, and that is a long way off, you see—but there you'd find friends, Nappo—friends who would aid you. But you see you would hardly be able to accomplish all this; and you would be hunted from the day or hour you left here. You would stand but a small chance of escaping again, and if they caught you this time, you'd be shipped off to Alabama or Mississippi, where you would forever remain in bondage. The difficulties to be surmounted are far too great, Nappo'

'What! fer liberty, massa! Fer freedom?' exclaimed Nappo, strangely. 'Yer nebber was a slave, Massa Toney,' said Nappo with deep emphasis. 'Yer nebber know'd w'ot it was to wear de chains, an' feel de lash ob Beck an' Taskem, an' dem.'

'I have seen more of it than I shall ever see again, Nappo,' replied Toney. 'But it's a difficult thing for you to escape from it, any way.'

'Lucyberg—Green Ribber—Harps'd—Cartige—Annerson—'hio Ribber—freedom!' said Nappo, clasping his hands in the intensity of hope, and repeating the words again and again: 'Lucyberg, Green Ribber, Harps'ed, Cartige, 'hio—liberty! Oh! Massa Mettler, am yer gwine dar? am yer gwine to de 'hio ribber, an' Warbush, an' Cartige, an' free State?'

'Yes, Nappo, never to return.'

'W'en you gwine dar?' asked Nappo, again.

'Within a few days.'

Nappo was silent, and Toney left him, finally, with the injunction:

'Remember, Nappo, two wrongs don't make one right. If you attempt to escape from bondage, you do so at your peril. If you do go, though, remember Lewisburg, Green River, Harpshead, Carthage, Ohio River—

An' freedom 'tank God!' exclaimed Nappo, earnestly, as his kind-hearted friend disappeared.

'I shouldn't be at all surprised,' said Toney to himself, as he departed toward the house, 'I shouldn't wonder, now, if Nappo really intended to run away again—poor fellow!'

It certainly did look somewhat suspicious!

* * * * * * *

'Dar 'tis! dar 'tis! Praise de Lord, Katty! Dar 's de 'hio ribber, fer sart'n!'

'D' yer know it, Nappo? Do yer know dat's de 'hio?' queried Katty, as they passed out from the top of the rock, a mile to the southward of the water, but from which they could plainly see a broad belt in the river.

'Are you sure on it?'

'I can't be nuff 'n else, Katty; can't be, you see. 'Ere we've bin 'most a week comin' up, norf—norf, all de time. Dat muss be de 'hio; an' soon 's it git dark 'gin, bless God! we'll cross ober, an' den we's in de free land altogedder, forebber an' ebber, tank de Lord!'

'But how's yer gwine ter git ober dar?' asked Katty. 'How's yer gwine ter do dat?'

This question rather puzzled Nappo. He could not answer it. He did not know precisely where they were, but he felt sure that that stream must be passed before he could really begin to be free again. They had found Green River, as they expected to do, and had left it far away to the eastward. He was sure this was the Ohio.

It was now nearly noon. They had been skulking since daylight. Buff had been kept quiet latterly only by constant threats that the Buckra-man was after them all; and though he was utterly starved, and sick, and worn out with the hardships he had just experienced, he still held up, and was as quiet and cautious as he could well be.

Katty did not complain. She had never known what it was to breathe 'free' air, but she had for twenty years experienced its opposite! She was content to abide the result, and craved the change, at least by way of experiment!

Nappo had known the sweets of temporary liberty; and, oh! how his heart yearned once more for the bright sunshine and gentle skies beyond, and to behold, perhaps, the smiling faces of those whom he remembered in his earlier years, and who came and went when they would and as they would, without being subject to the frown and the scourge of an unrelenting and brutal taskmaster.

Before nightfall, Nappo had quietly gathered together a mass of small logs, that had been cut for steamboat uses, near the river's edge, with which he commenced to construct a rude raft. He had no implement whatever, except a pocket-knife that he had taken with him, and which served him to cut and split a few young saplings, with which he at last bound the ends of the logs together.

In this work he was unobserved; and diligently did he labor to prepare the rough mass of wood, and secure it in a body, so that it should serve to sustain the weight of himself, and Katty, and the boy across the river. And Katty was not idle by any means, in the mean time. Though she had been unused to such rude treatment and such toil, she aided Nappo in arranging the logs, and in tying them together; and when one parcel had been so secured, a similar layer of sticks was placed cross-wise upon the others, for greater strength and safety; and finally, beneath the rays of the softly-shining moon, at midnight, with no eye upon their movements save His 'who shelters the fatherless, and succors the distressed of all nations,' the humble refugees embarked upon their doubtful voyage.

The wind was blowing freshly from the south-westward. The only peril they now stood in fear of—except discovery from the shore, possibly—was that of being run down by the steamboats that were then passing up or down the river. As these came and went but seldom, they hoped to get across the stream without being injured in this way. As they were destitute of oar or sail, however, there was no way to avoid this jeopardy and they were compelled to take the risk, and trust to their fate.

With difficulty and hard toiling only did they at length get their somewhat cumbrous raft afloat—for it had been constructed too far from the water's edge. They finally saw it in the river fairly, and, with a last prayer for eventual success, they stepped upon their reeling, swaying bark, and pushed out from the shore, toward the State of Illinois.

The raft very soon fell into the current of the river. Nappo had provided himself with a thin slab of wood, which he thought might answer the purpose of a rudder, (for lack of anything better,) and with which he continued to paddle the raft on a little to windward, as it continued to float down the stream. By the aid of this, and the fresh breeze that blew from the Kentucky shore, they continued on, in safety, and prosperously, and every moment, every stroke of his huge, clumsy paddle bore them nearer and nearer to the land of liberty!

'We'll git dar! we'll git dar, Katty, sure's de Lord libs in heb'n!' said Nappo, dashing his paddle into the water, steadily and firmly, while the raft moved slowly but certainly forward to the opposite shore, though it continually floated down the stream at the same time.

'We'll git dar, Katty! Bress de Lord fer dis—fer dis dark night, an' dis raft, an' eb'ry ting in dis worl'!' exclaimed the poor, struggling, starving, almost exhausted Nappo. 'We'll be dar'n a few minits, an' den soon's we put foot on dat 'ar shore younder, den we's free—free! Katty! Free, for ebber an' ebber more!'

'Ef dey duzzn't cotch us ag'in, Nappo.'

'Cotch us! Ha, ha! Dey'll nebber cotch dis chile no more. No, no! Tank de good Lord, I knows 'em; an' ef dey ebber cotches Nappo 'gin, he nebber'll run off from 'em no more, fer sart'n—dass a fack. But we'll see 'f dey cotch 'um!'

An eddy that made in shoreward drew the raft within its circle at this moment, and, as it swung round, a heavy steamer hove suddenly in sight from below the point, coming up the river at a sharp speed, almost directly upon the raft.

Nappo and Katty were seriously alarmed, as the great ponderous vessel came thumping on, with its two noisy high pressure engines, lest they should be run down and dashed in pieces by the monster-paddles. But the steamer wheeled around the point, shot up again into the main current, and left a rushing wake behind her that only served to drive the raft ashore within the next three minutes, in perfect safety.

'Bress God! Praise de Lord, Katty! Quick—quick! come along, fast's you ken—up dis way! Up yere—up yere!' exclaimed Nappo, as he seized with one hand a hand of the girl, and with the other grasped the little wrist of Buff, and hastened away from the shore. 'Come 'long, come 'long, an' bress God all de time! We's in de land ob liberty, an' freedom, an' Hail Columby, an' de Declerash'n ob Independence, for sart'n! Come 'long, den, Katty. We's all safe an' soun,' now, praise de Lord; an' we'll fin' fren's up yere—come 'long!' And away hurried the trio, as fast as their wearied limbs would permit, though Nappo hadn't the slightest idea where he was going, or when he would stop. But at the same time, he felt sure that he had crossed the Ohio River; and somebody had impressed the truth pretty strongly upon his mind that when this object was attained, he might calculate with certainty that he was on the right 'side of Jordan!'

And the heart of Katty leaped for joy, too, as she fled, though she was fearfully worn down with the extraordinary exertion to which she had been subjected for the last week.

Was the atmosphere clearer than that she had ever breathed before? Was the climate she was now in so different from that to which, for twenty years previously, she had been accustomed to? Were the skies more genial, and were the breezes more balmy and invigorating? Or, was it merely the consciousness that she was free, that so exhilarated her, and caused her to forget her bruises, and pains, and bodily ills, while she still bounded on, on! singing praises to Him who had borne her and her associates thus safely through the wilderness—the desert—the shadows of bondage, to the green pastures, and the light and the joy of liberty!

Welcome! welcome, then, ye poor, despised, down-trodden sufferers—a thousand times welcome to Freedom's shores! It may be that your pursuers, the wretched hounds that even now scent your tracks, and who are striding far and fast to seize upon you—it may be that they will yet place their fiendish grip upon you, and that you will but have tasted the air which has so charmed you, ere they fall upon to destroy you.

Hasten, then! Away, away! Fly, Nappo, for your life! Halt not, fair Katty, until a wider margin is left behind you! For they who seek to crush and devour you—life, and body, and soul—are almost within reach of the sound of your weary, wavering footsteps!

On, on! Tarry not—falter not—slacken not a jot in your speed, for the enemy is abroad, and the chances may be against you, even while you are thus confident in the hopes that buoy you so gloriously up!

Away, Nappo! Away, Katty! The route you have chosen is the right one. Away! and God speed you on your errand!

☞ An Irishman went a fishing, and among other things, he hauled in a large-sized turtle. To enjoy the surprise of the servant girl he put it in her room. Agricultural, &c.

How We Did It.

Some twelve years since my father bought a farm which was "worked to death," as the neighbours said. Well, we soon found out how it had been worked, when we put a heavy team and new plough at work, and the virgin soil was turned up at six inches below the four inches worked to death. Our neighbours prophesied a failure, and when our crops vied with and exceeded their own, they were full of surmisings as to the wonderful strangers so successful in renewing such till-killed soil. "What manure did you put on that field?" a neighbour asked my father, one morning as they were looking at the deep green waving corn growing so rankly therein. "Ploughed deep, ploughed deep," answered he: "there's nothing like ploughing deep, and thoroughly pulverizing the soil, to bring good crops in all kinds of weather." That field had been used as meadow some fifteen years, producing from one-fourth to one-half a ton of hay to the acre. We broke it up deep, planted one year, sowed in oats the next, with clover and timothy, and the third year cut two tons of fine hay to the acre. Another field had been used for oats the same length of time. We ploughed deep, but had poor oats, as so much deep, new soil was turned up, never having been exposed to the weather, a hard and almost impenetrable crust having been formed at the depth of three or four inches, where the plough had scraped for years. As soon as possible we grassed it, and had excellent meadows, where others thought nothing but a bad weed—devil-gut, could grow. All the pasture land had a vigorous growth of elders on. But we "fixed" them by carefully ploughing round the roots, drawing them in piles to some large logs or stump-heap, and enjoying a beautiful bonfire after they had become well dried.

Hay Boxes for Horses.

Some of the New Orleans livery stables have wide plank grain-mangers, at a convenient height, and, instead of racks, boxes for hay, extending up from the mangers through the floor of the loft above. These boxes are a trifle smaller at the top than at the bottom, so that the hay will slide down rapidly. They are open sufficiently at the side over the manger to allow the horse to pull out the hay while dust accumulates in the manger, instead of in his mane. One hay-box answers for two stalls.—American Agriculturist.

To Relieve Choked Cattle.

Mix a spoonful of gunpowder with enough hog's lard to form a ball the size of a hen's egg—open the animal's mouth, and after pulling out the tongue slightly, chuck the ball of lard and powder into the throat, let go the tongue, and the work is done. I have tried this in two instances, and it produced immediate relief.—[W. S., P., Milford, Vt., in Country Gentleman.

To Cure Garget in Cows.

A correspondent of the Ohio Farmer, gives the following as a cure for the garget:—"Take raw linseed oil and rub all over the cow's bag, which if done on the first appearance, is all that is needed generally; but two or three applications always have cured the stubborn cases, and is easily done."

ANTI-SLAVERY.

There is no greater bug a-boo to many persons than anti-slavery, and nothing they hate so much as an abolitionist. If such persons reflected that a man can not help believing as he does on any point, it would moderate their wrath against those who hold that slavery is a sin or a political mistake, or pecuniary folly. Nobody doubts that many abolitionists are sincere, and the fact is, nearly all men are abolitionists of one sort or another. They only differ as to the mode. Some content themselves with proving, in season and out of season, that slavery is a sin, and this class though they have proposed no action to abolish it, and have actually done nothing but preach their one primary idea have been more persecuted than any other kind of abolitionists. Another sort think the Constitution of the United States sustains slavery and they won't vote. A third kind wish to elect liberty men to office and thus have slavery legally abolished. A fourth class would confine slavery like apprenticeship to the State in which it exists with the hope that thus it would die out. A fifth class wish slavery abolished by shipping all the blacks to Africa. A sixth class wish it abolished if the masters could be paid for the slaves, and a seventh class wish it abolised, but don't see how it can be.

In the South many persons consider slavery as a less profitable system than free labor, and many others see imminent danger of future convulsions, and bloodshed from the infusion of a majority of white blood in the slaves by the amalgamation that is constantly going on.

We propose from time to time examining the views of the different classes of abolitionists, with the hope of arriving at the truth, and will at all times be willing to admit articles in opposition or intended to show that slavery is morally right, or scriptural, or democratic, or politically profitable or pecuniarily profitable, either to masters or to slaves.

☞ A negro woman was killed in Williamson county about a quarter of a mile from Beach's tavern, on Wednesday last by Mrs. James Baolton. It appears that Mrs. B., exasperated by jealousy, whipped the woman, who belonged to her husband, scalded her, knocked her in the head with a spade, and finally hung her. We learn that Mrs. B. confesses to the killing, but avers that it was done in self-defence. She has been arrested, and the affair was to have undergone a judicial examination yesterday. Our informant says that Mrs. B. is rather a good looking woman, and appears to be about thirty years of age. If the circumstances of the murder are such as stated to our informant, they are perhaps without a parallel in atrocity in the criminal annals of the State. For the sake of humanity, we hope they are misrepresented.—Nashville Banner.

Had the 'negro woman' been FREE, and had the command of her own person, in all probability there would have been no cause for Mrs. James Baolton's jealousy. But such are the beauties of Slavery—the wife and mistress of the house must have 'negro women,' (slaves) to wait upon her ladyship, while the lord of the house, to crown himself as a gentleman, must be the father of a few mulatto children. The system of Slavery carries its own curse with it, and not only damns the State that supports it but carries a curse into the bosom of every family that encourages the "peculiar institution." Hence a female Slave may be forced by her master into debauchery against her will, and then slain by her mistress for a crime she could not avoid.

This is an institution that a few of our would be-Democrats in Newport are going mad to sustain; but, like every thing else of the kind, they have attempted to support here must also fall; and God send it ever may. Democracy in its purity calls upon no system of tyranny from any State for its support, nor upon any sect or ism of the day. It is an element of equal rights and freedom, boundless and uncurbed by the institutions of any State, and bids defiance to the sectional cavils of political men.

Slave Families.

A bill recently was introduced into the "Legislature of Kansas," to prevent the separation of slave families. It produced an intense excitement. Mr. Stringfellow said:—

"He was opposed to the bill, not only because it unjustly discriminates, but because its principles are wrong. He did not think the principle of separating husband and wife or child and mother was wrong. 'I do not pretend to be any better than God's chosen people were, or God himself; and God framed laws which allowed the separation of husband and wife and of families. I believe, sir, it is right to sell a mother from her child or a wife from her husband; if I did not, I would vote for the bill.' He then showed that tax sales would nullify the object of the bill, and he thought it would make the condition of the slave worse than it is. 'This act,' he said, 'entails all those things on the slave that you seem to consider evil. I don't call them evils; to sell slaves is a right; a right recognized by God himself; recognized by every Southern State.'"

The vote was then called, and the bill was rejected—17 to 3.

Colored Mechanics.

Nothing more strikingly marks the advancement of the people of color than their entire success in the mechanic arts, wherever such employments have been opened to them: and the number of such artisans is increasing yearly.

Of this worthy class, we take pleasure in referring to Messrs. L. B. N. Walker, and Samuel Amos, boot and shoemakers, Penn street, above Arch. We happen to know, from a trial of their work, that they understand their business, and also that they are every way worthy of patronage. They are skillful knights of the last and awl, more worthy, in fact, than those who wear the Star and Garter. Let them be patronized. —Norristown Olive Branch.

☞ "If the black men are set free in the Slave States there will be no such thing as governing the white laborers" said an employer yesterday in Cincinnati, "Why" said he; "every sort of business would be stagnated. The mechanics and laboring men would raise the price of days work so that employers could not hire them, at the rates contracts have been taken. At the rates produce sells now, working men could command $4 per day, and the wealthy builders and manufacturers would have to undertake work at over double the present rates. Every man that is wealthy is benefitted by the system of Slavery, because it knocks down wages and gives him a chance to get double the work done for the same money; besides it makes white men saucy to pay them high prices for their labor—consequently, I go for negro Slavery—it keeps the black man in his right place and prevents the white laborer from getting above himself."

Here is one reason why some men in free States go for black Slavery. It is for the purpose of making white negroes.—The Weekly News.

The War Ended.

It is a matter of regret that for some time past, the leading colored people of this Province have been at war with the Agent, and his servants, of the party having in possession the "Dawn School;" but let it not be inferred from that fact, that, we are opposed to necessary and becoming efforts of white missionaries among us. We are not so opposed! On the contrary, our purpose is, like that of the laws of our country, to know no man by his color, or kin! THE PRINCIPLES OF UNIVERSAL BROTHERHOOD OF ALL MEN IS OUR MOTTO! The fact that the Agent, in question, did not base his action upon such a motto, was the real cause of the war. We have no quarrel with our white friends, and especially, our English friends. Just the opposite is the truth. We love them, and feel grateful to them for their sympathy with us, and efforts for our good. We hope still to share their affection, and to be benefitted by their wise and judicious labours among us. We say wise and judicious, because any good man, or woman is not suitable to be OUR GUIDE! We hope our friends will not forget that fact. It is true, that the imperfect state of society, socially speaking, classes us, to ourselves generally, as it does other people, who are somewhat like us, as to morality, intelligence, and wealth. But we are laboring to effect the needed revolution, in society, on our own and the behalf of others, and to accomplish this good work, we need the co-operation of our brethren of different nations of this and other countries. Shall we have it? May Christians of all orders say YEA! As a people, we are not free from the infirmities of those about us, nor of the imperfections of humanity. We know there is much room for our improvement, and we are desirous to improve; hence, our minds and hearts are open to receive intellectual and moral instruction, and our arms are extended to embrace those, who may be sent or who shall come among us as the servants of Christ, for such purpose, whether they be white, or black, and come they whence they may. Should such come, we are determined, that our denominational difference shall not prevent us from being "fellow-helpers to the truth." We say to our Christian friends, there are wide fields of usefulness, in Canada, and particularly, in the midst of those situated as we are—probably none more so in the world! Our salvation and elevation is as valuable as any other people on earth. May the lovers of humanity not overlook such an important truth! We do not say so much, about what others may do for us, because, we would lose sight of our own obligation, to do for ourselves. We wish the law of heaven to be our motto, as well as that of our country; and "as heaven's first law is to help him, who helps himself," we would help ourselves, while, we look to others, to do their duty. Nor do we desire, strictly speaking, a complexional help. Our interest, as a class, don't need it, nor does that of our country, nor of humanity, as a whole, demand it; indeed the greatest good of the greatest number of the family of man, seems to require, quite the opposite. All we mean is, that we need aid to better our condition, in common with others, that we all may serve properly, our day and generation. Since the war, we trust is ended, as the Agent has left Dawn, as is supposed, let the TRUSTEES of that school do their duty, and all of us go to work, for the accomplishment of the above end.

The Herald of Freedom and the Colored People of Ohio.

We regret to learn that the "Herald of Freedom" is no more. It died from starvation! That is a disgrace to the colored people of the "Buckeye" State. The editor and proprietor of that well conducted and useful journal—Peter Clark, Esq., deserved better things at the hands of his own people; and especially of the inhabitants of Cincinnati. We judge from Mr. Clarke's valedictory, that he has sunk considerable money in his efforts to keep up the Herald. He has our sympathy. We hope the persons to whom, he proposes to refund their monies, which they paid, in advance, will not receive it, but allow Mr. Clark to keep it, to help to repay him his losses; indeed the friends ought to make up a purse, containing the amount he is minus, and present to him. There is wealth and honor, as well as a sense of justice, among the colored people of Ohio! We have lived among them, and know what we say. Though they have failed hitherto, to sustain a good journal, devoted to their interest, among themselves, yet we believe they can and will do so. We urge upon them, to make arrangements, either by general convention, or an association of gentlemen and ladies, or a joint stock company, or otherwise, to get up and SUSTAIN a good, weekly, family newspaper. Their own interest, as the disfranchised people of their State, and the interest of our wronged people generally, as well as the interest of the world at large, demand it! What can our people in Ohio hope for, without such means as a paper to advocate THEIR RIGHTS? The papers of their country, conducted by white men, have not done it properly, and we doubt very much whether they will, at least, for some time to come. THEY MUST HAVE A PAPER OF THEIR OWN! Let them indicate to Mr Clark their wish, to have him go forward with the Herald of Freedom again, and their determination to sustain him, and all, we trust will be well, notwithstanding Mr. Clark's peculiar notions about some things, (which, by the way, we hope he will abandon, for the sake of his people and the good he may do them,) which may be borne with, and turned to profit. When we heard that the Herald of Freedom had gone down, we asked—is the bishop dead?—is Watson broke?—is Day yet in Canada?—is Langston feeding swine?—has the devil got Gains? In the name of heaven, what has become of Green and Gordan, Shelton and Satchell, Mount and Morris, and the hosts of other equally good and true men; and those women without number, who used to work for the cause in the days of old? The paper stopped! Shame on Cincinnati! Why she is sufficient for this work of herself! When I lived there, some eighteen years ago, she was proud of her noble colored freemen, and of their number, intelligence, and wealth! Then they did more to sustain their newspaper than now, and why? We fear their intelligence and piety have not kept pace, with their acquisitions of wealth! hence, that retrogression, so much complained of and so deeply felt: "The love of money is the root of all evil." It is a fatal mistake if such be their case! But the tried and true will rally, we believe, and sound the trump, and the dead will arise. We expect soon to enjoy former pleasure, from beholding once more the Herald of Freedom!

It is unpleasant for us to have to show to the world how contemptibly mean some men are. They will subscribe, when the Agents are canvassing the country, in particular at public meetings, where they are desirous of letting themselves be seen, anxious to support the paper, and say to the friend next to them: "You should take this paper; you will not lose anything by subscribing;" which is very true, for he intends to take it, until he thinks it is time for him to send his year's money; then he goes to the Post-office, and wishes it returned, or stays away from the Office until the Postmaster notifies us not to send it. Such unprincipled persons should be known, in order that business men may know who to trust. The man who values one dollar and a half more than his word, is worthy of being watched at all times. Whereas the Provincial Parliament has been imposed upon by a petition of the majority of the Trustees of the FIRST COLORED CALVINISTIC BAPTIST CHURCH OF TORONTO, Therefore, Resolved, that a Committee of the Church be intrusted, on behalf of the same, to publish in some City paper the following:—

"It seems due to us and to the public, and especially to our Pastor, to state that the counter Petition of the majority of the Trustees of the property of the said Church, situated at the corner of Queen and Victoria Streets, to the last Provincial Parliament was a base falsehood, as it respects the Church and its Minister. It is but proper that we further state, that many of the names on that Petition are not members of the said Church, and that the public may judge of the truthfulness of our affirmation, we hereunto annex the said Counter Petition."

Done by order and on behalf the Church.

Toronto, October, 1855.

PETITION:

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of Canada, in Provincial Parliament assembled.

THE PETITION OF THE TRUSTEES AND MEMBERS OF THE FIRST COLORED CALVINISTIC BAPTIST CHURCH IN TORONTO.

HUMBLY SHEWETH —

That your petitioners have been informed through the public papers that a Bill has been introduced into Parliament to vary the terms, conditions and trusts, upon which their Church property is held, and to interfere with the internal management of the affairs of the Church.

Your Petitioners beg leave respectfully to protest against any such alteration and interference, and trust that your Honorable House will not readily entertain any measure so dangerous in its tendency, so mischievious in its effects, as to annul an instrument solemnly executed under seal, and received and acted upon for years.

Your Petitioners respectfully state to your Honorable House that the deed in question now sought to be destroyed, was drawn upon strict accordance with instructions given by a committee of Church Members appointed for that purpose, and after preparation and before execution, was openly and publicly read in the said Church, and unanimously adopted, accepted and confirmed by the members thereof

That the members of the said Church acted thereunder in perfect harmony for many years until the present Minister came among them, since when, anxious to centre all the power of the Church in his own hands, he has left no means untried to effect his object, and by misrepresentation and threats of expulsion, has excited distrust, discord and dissension among them, and succeeded in raising a party to support his views, but cannot now command a majority of the members, except by setting at defiance the discipline of the Church.

Your Petitioners, therefore, beg your Honorable House not to pass the said Bill, but to leave the Church to settle its own difficulties which it is perfectly competent to do, and will easily accomplish, so soon as they choose another pastor.

And your Petitioners as in duty bound, will ever pray.

County Agricultural Fair.

We were at the Agricultural Fair held in this place on the 20th inst., and were pleased to find such a quantity of fine stock upon the ground. We have visited both State and County Fairs in the States, and have seen a deal more stock, and the grounds better decorated; but considering that Kent County is but in her infancy in an agricultural point of view, we must say it excelled anything we have heretofore witnessed.—The horned cattle looked fine. The sheep were such as would be an eye-sore to Yankees. Mr. Adams' Fanning Mills made a fine appearance.

After examining the Fair Ground, our attention was called to the Horticultural department, in a spacious cottage opposite the Fair Ground, where there were exhibited a quantity of the largest apples, potatoes, squashes, pumpkins, onions, beets, turnips, &c., we have before witnessed. The wheat, oats, corn and barley, was generally good. Great credit is due the ladies for the exhibition of fancy needle-work; also the dairy produce, such as butter, and cheese. R. C. McFadden & Co., of King Street, made quite a display of Boots and Shoes, of superior quality, proving to the Ladies and Gentlemen of Chatham, and adjoining country, the superior mechanical ability of his workmen. A saddle was manufactured by a colored workman in the establishment of Mr. J. Hooper, King Sreet, which was not surpassed by any on the ground.

S.

☞ We observed with no little pleasure, during the past two weeks, the large amount of business that has been done in the Village of Dresden, C. W. The wheat merchants seem to have about as much as they could do. We noticed as many as four sail vessels and one steamer lying at the different wharves at one time, and the streets pretty well thronged with teams, bringing produce from different parts of the county, to be shipped. A number of new-comers have arrived of late, both colored and white. Several new buildings are going up, and preparations are being made to erect a large Flouring Mill, by Wm. Whipper, Esq. Mr. J. H. Charity's new Store is open, and doing well. The Baptists are preparing to build a Meeting-house—while a number of Village Lots have been purchased of late, which we hope, will soon have fine buildings on them, and we are proud to say that among the purchasers of Lots is Miss Isabella Goings.

PETITION.

To His Excellency SIR EDMUND WALKER HEAD, Governor General of Canada:

The Petition of the Undersigned, JAMES REEVE, of the Town of Chatham, County of Kent, Canada West, Trader,

HUMBLY SHEWETH:

That in the month of September, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-three, your Petitioner purchased of one George S. Lester, of Detroit, in the State of Michigan, the schooner Julia Smith, of about seventy-five tons burden, for the price of two thousand five hundred dollars, to be paid one thousand dollars down, five hundred dollars on the next first day of December, and one thousand dollars on the next first day of July. That there was an insurance of two thousand dollars on said vessel, to continue until the first day of December, then next, which by the bargain was to ensure to your Petitioner's benefit on his taking possession of said vessel. That your Petitioner paid down said one thousand dollars purchase money and took possession as his property, of said vessel. That in sailing her she was blown ashore on Long Point, on Lake Erie, by which the insurers became liable for the damage done to said vessel. That said Lester, who still held the insurance papers, authorized your Petitioner to proceed and get off said vessel, which your Petitioner did do, expending in doing so, the sum of six hundred and seventy-two dollars and thirty-nine cents. That said Lester recovered the insurance to that amount, and your Petitioner considered the five hundred dollars due for said vessel on the 1st December, 1853, to be thus paid, with a balance to be carried to your Petitioner's credit, towards the next and last payment due in July then next.

That your Petitioner the next season loaded said schooner at the port of Chatham, for Garden Island, near Kingston, with five thousand pipe staves, six thousand West India staves, shipped by Henry Waters, Esq. Also, thirty hundred weight of tobacco, in boxes, manufactured in Chatham, by Henry Jackson, and fifty bags of oats, containing one hundred and six bushels.

That John Bruce was master of said schooner. That while continuing her voyage through lake St. Clair, on the morning of Sunday the tenth day of June, in the year one thousand and fifty-four, and while at the head of Peach Island, two miles from the American shore, and before said vessel had entered American waters, as appeared by the affidavit of Michael Stoney, mate of said vessel, annexed. Said vessel was boarded by an armed steamer, named the "United," as appears by the affidavit of the captain of said schooner annexed—that she was by force and violence taken possession of, and carried into Detroit. That said vessel and cargo were subsequently seized by the officers of custom at said Detroit. That your Petitioner totally lost said vessel and cargo, owing to such act of violence perpetrated in British waters, for which he claims redress to save him from utter ruin.

Your Petitioner humbly prays that your Excellency may take such steps as may seem advisable to claim reparation from the United States Government for your Petitioner's losses.

And as in duty bound will ever pray.

Chatham, C. W., Sept. 1855.

We cut the above from the Planet. We hope our colored fellow-citizens will freely sign that Petition. It is a matter of justice that Mr. REEVE have his Petition granted.

Hon. S. P. Chase.

With no little pleasure, we announce the election of the Hon. S. P. Chase—governor of Ohio. We have long known Mr. Chase as the true and tried friend of the oppressed, and especially of the colored people.

Ohio has done well in her selection of him to rule over her. It is the best act she ever performed. It indicates her love of freedom and determination to resist the national sentiment in favour of slavery. May a kind Providence continue to watch over Mr. Chase, and guide him to still greater usefulness and a happy destiny!—Mr. Chase, as a lawyer, has no superior in the United States. He is a statesman of first order, and distinguished as a philanthropist! He deserves the triumph he has obtained over his enemies, and his position is but a partial reward for his disinterested benevolence. Ohio should be proud of one so distinguished as he is; and may she take care of him, to bless his country, yet as its President!

Look out for the Impostor.

A colored man by the name of William Carter, of Chatham, C. W., is now in the United States, begging money to buy himself. We last heard of him at Port Huron, Michigan. We are informed that he is a base impostor!

Tea-Meeting at St. Catharines A. M. E. Church —An Agent for the Dawn—Missionary Prosperity—Journey to Philadelphia, &c.

PHILADELHIA, Oct. 23, 1855.

MR. EDITOR,—Indisposition and other hindrances have prevented me from giving to your readers the benefit of my observations, when at St. Catharines, ere this; but it may not be too late yet to urge upon emigrants and others, the claims of that thriving town.

St. Catharines is certainly one of the most beautiful and thriving places in Canada, and although colored people are debarred equal school privileges at present, and although numerous cases of Yankee prejudice have frequently occurred there, yet such objections should not have weight with enterprising and well disposed persons. I am sorry to see a disposition on the part of colored citizens of St. Catharines to leave that town—by encouraging an influx of colored settlers for other villages west—to sell their fine property at almost the first bid, &c.; that should not be; their highest interests will be subserved by holding on to their excellent positions in that town—buying every foot of ground they can get hold of, and selling as little as possible; because some ignoramus chooses to entertain prejudice—in battling against not yielding to prejudice lers who will buy lots, and so meet the minions prejudice at the polls, not thinning the ranks by removal, and so exposing the few who may remain, to the tender mercies of the mushroom aristocracy thereabouts, who were so signally foiled by Mr. Lindsay and his faithful colored compeers in the colored school election.

On the 8th instant, a Tea-Meeting for the Provincial Freeman came off in the Baptist Chapel, which, owing to the state of the weather, was but tolerably well patronized, however, the Freeman is in good repute among the citizens, and they gave liberally of their substance on the occasion. Among those most active, were, Mesdames Gross, Hight, Lindsay, Williamson, Posey, Shepherd, and a host of names I cannot now think of, came forward promptly also. But that rain! and many good people being either sugar or salt, I have to announce as the receipts, for which the managers are extremely grateful, were £8 8s. 1d.; from this sum £1 is to go to the Dawn Committee, and £1 towards expenses of suit of the colored men in the Elizabeth Green case, if needed, leaving for the Freeman £6 8s.

Why will not the Dawn Committee send out an Agent to the colored people of Canada, to attend that business specially? The people are thoroughly aroused about the Dawn, and will give of their substance to get possession of their property again.

During my stay in St. Catharines, I had frequent opportunities of examining the general improvements of the place, and was in no way more gratified than when viewing the snug homesteads of the colored people. Messrs. Maddern, Young, Lindsay, and others, are adding largely, by their enterprise, to the beauty of the place; their success is a standing refutation to the falsehood that begging is needed for the fugitives of St. Catharines. The African Methodist Episcopal Church, too, for which the Rev. Hiram Wilson is now a paid Agent, is a fine building; by the way, the Rev. Mr. Wilson is erecting a large brick mansion for his own use in the suburbs, which, when completed, must, from its adornments, cost several thousand dollars. Mr. Wilson has long resided in St. Catharines, and like other enterprising Americans, has profited by his change of position; having but little of this world's goods on his arrival in Canada, he has, by superior skill, as a missionary, to fugitives, for many years, and latterly as preacher to the canal sailors, Agent for the African Church, &c., &c., become possessed of some valuable town lots, in addition to the very commodious and fashionable dwelling to which I have alluded. Mr. Wilson's prosperity only confirms one in the irresistible conclusion, that no missionary field is more profitable than that in which the fugitives of Canada are the victims, when, as in almost every instance on record, and in the present instance, an eye is kept single to individual and pecuniary success; and to that other conclusion, equally irresistible; namely, that no people need such missionaries less than the said fugitives; for there they are giving to a preacher of another denomination—a Congregationalist—thirty-seven per cent of funds begged to build up their African Methodist Churches; by that act of his and of theirs, they not only show the success of their mission as African Methodists, but the greater fact of having made a convert of the Congregational Missionary who will say after this, that fugitives need to have such parsons fattening upon the nauseous diet created by publishing to the world the moral and pecuniary destitution of the starving and suffering fugitives of St. Catharines. I have just learned of some hundreds of dollars collected on the strength of arrivals in Canada, not twenty, nor ten, nor five of which were ever given to those said to be so destitute. But I must drop this revolting subject for the present.

After much delay, I reached this place on the 13th, a day or two before "the great failure" of the "National Convention," wearied with fatigue and exposure, indeed by accidental detention, rain, as usual, &c. My friends are doing all they can for the Freeman, in the way of getting names, getting up meetings, &c., of which, and the Convention, more hereafter, probably.—However, the friends of emigration need to be hopeful, as their subject calls out in ugly prominence the worst characteristics of its opponents.

HALIFAX, Oct. 24th,

The Africa arrived this morning.

Breadstuffs advanced slightly—good demand.

Nothing done at Sebastopol.

Second Despatch.

Breadstuffs slightly advanced. Provisions without material change.

The Africa will be due at Boston on Thursday evening. Her dates from Liverpool are to the 13th inst., one week later than received per Atlantic at New York.

The steamship Hermann left Cowes on the 10th, for New York, with a full cargo of passengers.

The news by this arrival is, in a commercial sense, highly important, but otherwise brings little of interest.

Affairs at Sebastopol had undergone no change. Except an occasional interchange of shots, everything was quiet.

The Allies are threatning Perekop, and were also manifesting some activity on the Danube.

News of the bombardment of Odessa by the Allied fleets was daily looked for.

A slight engagement had taken place near Kertch, and resulted in favor of the Allies.

From Asia the news is unimportant. The Turks still hold out at Kars, although closely invested, and much distressed for provisions.

Breadstuffs—A fair demand existed at the extreme prices of the week preceding, and in some descriptions a slight advance had taken place.

Indian corn in fair request at former prices.

Provisions were steady at former rates.

Third Despatch.

General Simpson's despatch, dated Sebastopol 29th, says:—950 men are employed daily in making a road from Balaklava to the camp. Fatigue parties are in the town engaged in getting timber and other material from the ruins of the buildings, to get shelter for the troops before the winter sets in.

Gen. Simpson further says that the Russians from the batteries on the North side caused some little annoyance, but had not prevented work from being carried on.

By the explosion of a kind of infernal machine numbers had been dug up in various parts of the town.

A slight engagement, in which 10 Hussars and a troop of Chasseurs beat back a detachment of Cossacks.

A letter from Vienna states that several give credit to the rumors that Russia is contracting a loan in North America, and that negotiations were already concluded.

Advices from Marseilles state that the Minister of War was still using every endeavour to reinforce the army in the Crimea.

Pellissier and Simpson, according to the Daily News, have had a meeting to prevent indiscrete revelations, by newspaper correspondents, military or civil.

Gen. Marmora declares that he will severely punish the author of any letters which may be found informing the Russians of the movements of the Allied position.

Latest.

The Journal of Constantinople says the commander of the Turkish army on the Danube has received instructions to procure rations for 50,000 French troops, who are to arrive at Silistria about the third of October.

A letter from Constantinople states that the Anglo-Saxon contingent have received orders to proceed to Silistria.

Austria, in a circular to a representative, intimates that Prussia is at liberty to act as mediator between the belligerent Powers.

The present is not a favorable time; that the Western Powers must follow up their advantages, and treat with Russia when she has been expelled from the Crimea.

The garrison of Kars still holds out. Part of Omar Pachu's force was advanced from Batoum to attempt to raise the blockade. The army at Kars now number 10,000 men.

Gen. Mouravieff has forwarded to St. Petersburg the report of the successful Cavalry engagement, in which the Cossack militia and dragoons defeated a detachment of 180 regular Turkish Cavalry, and 100 Bashi bazouks were killed. The Turks had about 400 killed. Alli Pasha the Turkish commander was taken prisoner. The Turks lost their guns.

The Russians were repairing Sweaborg with the greatest activity, enlarging the barracks and building batteries upon the island.

Further accounts, though meagre, of the bombardments of Riga states that the battery at Medicum suffered little, but the battery at Bullan suffered considerably.

On the 25th Sept., three frigates arrived at the mouth of the river, and a boat's crew set fire to 10 vessels.

Admiral Penaud, describing the expedition to the Gulf of Bothnia by a French corvette and two English steamers states that—Russian vessels, anchored at Buran, a small town on the Finnish coast, were captured and, and eight other vessels, making the tonage captured 250.

The Moniteur states officially that the Empress is pregnant, and that her health is excellent.

An alliance between Prince Napoleon and the Princess Royal is rumored in political circles.

Denmark.

It is announced in one of the London papers that the Danish Government invited the maratine powers to meet in Congress at Copenhagen, in November, to settle the question of the Sound Dues. Denmark, it is said, proposed a redemption of the Sound Dues.

Greece.

The Ministry had resigned, owning to the persistance of the King in refusing to have any intercourse with their resignation, and a new Ministry had been formed.

By the International Line.

Simpson reports trifling engagements, in which the 10th Hussars and a troop of Chasseurs took a detachment of Cossacks near Kertch.

A letter from Vienna states that several Banks were contracting a loan on North America, and that the negotiations are nearly concluded.

Letters of the 10th state that the Minister of War was still using every exertion to reinforce the army in the Crimea.

A letter from Sebastopol, published in the Frankfort Gazette, states that the sunken Rusian ships can be raised with difficulty, as the Russians had closed them in every part but one, and attached hose to the hulls, so that water could be pumped out when required.

Letters recommended that Divers should be employed to seek for hose to draw up water and enable the ships to raise.

Latest advices speak of an advance of the allies upon Perekop.

A despatch from Prince Gortschakoff, dated 9th inst., received at St. Petersburg, states that the enemy had advanced from Victoria, threatening Perekop, but had returned on meeting the advanced posts of the Russian left flank.

Six battalions of the Russians were put into disorder.

The retirement of the Russians was acknowledged.

The Frankford Post states that the body of the Russian army has been withdrawn from the plateau on the north side of Sebastopol, towards the heights of the Belbec.

Only a few thousand men now garrison the fort in the neighbourhood of Nicolaieff. Forty-five thousand men are concentrating.

☞ Queen Victoria's visit to Paris, it is said, brought 741,345 strangers into the city. If we place expenditure of each individual during a stay of ten days at the low average of $50, we arrive at a profit for Paris of over thirty-seven millions. It is stated that for jewellers the week was more profitable than any whole year during the reign of Louis Phillippe.

☞ The most frightful mortality occurred on board the Nicaragua steamer Uncle Sam, during her last passage from San Juan to San Francisco, which port she reached on the 14th of September: The cholera broke out with fearful violence, and before the vessel arrived at San Francisco, one hundred and twenty persons had died of this cruel disease. The passengers for whose alarm, perhaps, some allowance must be made, assert that instead of one hundred and twenty, there were two hundred deaths. Besides this awful mortality, seven others had subsequently died in the hospitals.

A Big Ship.

The steamship Adriatic, now being built for the Collins line of steamers, will be, when completed, the largest and most magnificent vessel afloat. She will measure five thousand six hundred tons; her length will be three hundred and forty-five feet on the broad line; depth of hold thirty-three feet; breadth of beam fifty feet.

Dissolution of the Union—Representation by Population.

Canada seems destined never to have repose from political struggles. The moment one question, which was falsely stated to have retarded the progress of the Province, was adjusted, by the most atrocious and uncalled for robbery which ever disgraced a Christian legislature, the alienation of the property given by a pious monarch for the sustentation of the Angelican Church, and the religious education of his Colonial subjects, than up starts some mountebank to suggest and recommend fresh sources of discord and disunion.

At a period in the history of Canada when of all others union and kindly feeling should be sought for and encouraged, some crackbrained enthusiasts desire for insufficient or suppressed reasons, to advocate a repeal of the union of Upper and Lower Canada; and because Lower Canada has, just now, numerically a smaller population than this Province, another class of politicians propose that those arrangements shall be changed which a few months since added one-third to the Representatives of the people, giving an equal portion to each Province

This plan would give the Province having by far the smallest extent, the power to outvote the larger one—a power which, we believe, would be used to oppress, irritate, and alienate the occupiers of 200,000 square miles of country, and upwards of one million of the loyal subjects of the Crown of England!

We cannot see upon what ground, fiscal social, or religious, such a course is to be advocated.

The attention of Europe is now attracted to this magnificent, fruitful and healthy country, where millions are wanted, and would be welcome; and it has been already announced, upon authority, that the French Government contemplates a large immigration into Lower Canada, of the industrious farmers of the Basque Provinces.

It is very probable that the population of the Lower Province will again exceed that of the Upper; and, in that case, would be a proportionate addition to its Representatives be conceded? Such a measure would certainly be equitable, but it would never be allowed by those who demand it for Upper Canada. The plan of Representation by Population would render a reconstruction of electoral districts necessary every five or six years!

We believe that certain parties are urging this measure from views of personal aggrandizement or from feelings of religious intolerance and persecution.

England has struck the chains from the negro's fettered hands, and relieved her Roman Catholic subjects from the penal statutes which excluded them from their birth-right as freemen.

There are those in free Canada who would reimpose them here, and make the holding of certain opinions, which, in our heart of hearts, we believe to be erroneous, a ground of exclusion from political privileges. But we do not consider that because our fellow subjects below entertain conscientiously, certain opinions they are on that account to be persecuted, but rather they should be convinced, not insulted, but converted, and that by the voice of reason, kindness and education—not by the carnal sword but by the teaching of GOD'S HOLY WORD according to the discipline and doctrine of the Reformed Church! Wherever, on this vast continent, good order and intelligence are spreading, there also the religion of the Bible spreads. And if it be probable that the English race and language and institutions will, in a century, pervade its deserts, all appearances favor the belief that the edifices of Christian worship will bless every landscape of the present wilderness, that shall then "blossom as the rose."

The vast interests involved in this article demand more notice on future occasions, and we can only add now, that we know nothing which disentitles our Lower Canadian friends from a full participation in all the privileges we enjoy, inasmuch as they are brave, intelligent, and loyal; and it is our duty and our interest to feel for and cultivate with them the most kindly courtesies of life, and the closest social and political relations.—Old Countryman.

IF YOU WOULD BE RICH,

GOOD morrow, friend—I'm a stranger in your borough, can you inform me where I can get a pair of good boots made?"

"Yes, sir, I can; just go to T. W. WILSON'S, King St. East, Chatham, next to Smith's Grocery; that's the place; he'll accommodate you most satisfactorily."

"Well, how is your judgment in regard to the quality of boots and shoes?"

"Most excellent—I'm an old boot and shoe maker; many are the days that I've drawn the cords."

"Where did you say I could find him?"

"Why, the next door to Mr. Andrew Smith's Grocery, corner of King and William Streets, East,—any person can tell you."

"Will you conduct me there?"

"I will with pleasure; for I know him to be, from experience, one of the best manufacturers of BOOTS AND SHOES in town. His stock is of his own manufacture, and he has always on hand a superior quality for gentlemen's wear. He's also very particular in getting up his work; so I'm confident he can't fail to give reasonable satisfaction to those who favor him with their patronage."

"There are some boot makers whose work is beautiful to the eye, but plaguy pinching to the feet; and I have lumps upon each instep, which in foul weather give me excruciating pain."

"Ah, yes, too much have I suffered by fetters from the boot moulders hands; but he's not one of them; he endeavours to make a sys'ematic fit, measuring from joint to heel, and from lump to toe—closely observing the most minute protuberance, if there be any upon the feet; and he seldom fails to make his boots set as easy thereon as a glove upon a lady's tender finger. Besides, he always keeps a superior stock on hand; perhaps you might obtain a pair upon the instant, that would fit your feet and please the eye."

"Then I must try him."

"Try him, of course, and you'll save at each end of your bargain. First—you'll buy cheaper—secondly, your boots will wear you longer."

"Come, let's go."

"I'm ready—Are you a cash man?"

"I am; for he who pays cash clips the discount of credit, and secures it in his own pocket."

"Then that's the place, for his motto reads"—

Ask of me no trust, when you come to buy;
Ask of me no trust, for you I must deny;
Ask of me no trust, it hath destroyed many;
Ask of me no trust, I cannot grant you any;
Ask of me no trust, but with your cash rally;
Ask of me no trust, nor with my pocket daily.

FORGERY.

The Counterfeit Radway's Ready Relief in Canada.

THE LIVES OF THE PEOPLE IN DANGER.

THE public are cautioned against purchasing a counterfeit of Radway's Ready Relief, which is now circulating through the Canadas.—We are informed that parties at Hamilton, C.W. have been selling a spurious article of our Ready Relief, for the genuine to dealers. This is not only a fraud upon us, but is a most wicked imposition on the public. The wretch that will knowingly lend himself to so vile and treacherous a trick, for the gain of a few extra sixpences, is unsafe to deal with, and should be shunned by all respectable dealers, for if a few sixpences will induce him to rob the distressed sufferer of hope and health and to place the invalid's life in danger, he would not scruple to deceive his best customers.

Dealers who wish the genuine, purchase only of established credit, not of irresponsible pedlars or travelling adventurers and impostors.

Dealers who have R. R. R. offered to them below our regular price, may rely upon the same being a counterfeit preparation. We never sell R. R. R. in large quantities for less than 10 per cent. from our regular gross price. Dealers who purchase the counterfeit and offer the same for sale, render themselves liable to prosecution.

All of our travellers and authorized Agents have a power of Attorney signed by us, authorizing them in our name, to transact our business.

The following are our only Agents in Hamilton, C. W. T. BICKLE & SON; HAMILTON, KNEESHAW & CO., In Toronto, LYMAN, BROTHERS, & CO., are our general agents—we also sell to SIMPSON & CO.

A MORE "IMPORTANT NOTICE!"

American Tract Society—Slavery.

THE Independent, of New York, in an article in that paper, of the 15th March being one of a continuation of articles regarding the 'American Tract Society," has this sentence:—'For thirty years, one of the greatest institutions of Evangenical Christendom has been testifying in effect that the institution of Slavery, the buying and selling of human beings, and the profession of the slave trader are less obnoxious to God, less contary to the Gospel, less perilous to the souls of men, than the practice of dancing. It has attempted to exhibit and authenticate on the widest scale, an administration of Christianity, in which there shall be no more syllable of rebuke for crimes that shock the morals sense of Christendom. The influence of the Tract Society has tended to make the Southern churches more timid and cowed in the presence of the imperious slave-trading interest. As a consequence of this policy—partly, but not exclusively—behold the SOUTHERN APOSTACY!"

In December 1844, a report of "The "Committee of the Synod of New York and New Jersey, on the subject of the mutilations of books by the American Tract Society," was published; and in that report, the mutilations and omissions in the editions published, by that Society, of D'Aubigne's History of the Great Reformation, were pointed out—besides, there are the omissions and expurgations in other books published, as to the vile sin of Slavery, and the substitution of sentences other than the original.

The notice by me entitled, "Publications," referable to these matters, has been widely circulated, and a Canadian public are again reminded of their duty.

A HISTORY OF ALL NATIONS,

FROM THE

EARLIEST PERIODS TO THE PRESENT TIME;

OR

UNIVERSAL HISTORY:

IN WHICH THE HISTORY OF EVERY NATION, ANCIENT AND MODERN, IS SEPARATELY GIVEN.

Illustrated by 70 Stylographic Maps and 700 Engravings

By S. G. GOODRICH,

AUTHOR OF 'PICTORIAL GEOGRAPHY OF THE WORLD,' 'PARLEY'S CABINET LIBRARY,' 'PARLEY'S TALES,' &c.

Complete in one imperial octavo volume, of more than twelve hundred pages of double column letter-press; and upwards of seven hundred elegant illustrations.

It is believed that a Universal History, suitable in form, extent, and arrangement, to the wants of the mass of American readers, has never been presented to the public. For this reason, and in compliance with numerous suggestions from those entitled to respect, the author has undertaken the formidable task of supplying one of a popular character and for general use.

A reader of history should always have in mind two things—viz., the place where, and the time when, an event happened. In the present work therefore, the greography of each country whose history is carefully given; and to aid the reader, seventy stylographic maps have been added. Careful attention, also, has been paid to Chronology, so that, at every page and every chapter, the reader may find the dates of the events which are described.

In order to avoid the confusion which inevitably arises from embracing the whole history of mankind in a general chronological view, the author has adopted an ethnographic arrangement, by which he presents each nation separately. The advantages of this plan for a popular treatise, are obvious. The mind of the reader is not overtasked by a boundless extent of view, nor bewildered by a perplexing multiplicity of objects. On the contrary, everythnig is clear and distinct. Events, instead of being forced out of their true place and connection, are presented in easy and natural succession, thus imparting to the work the attraction and interest of continuous narrative. Another advantage of the plan is, that it not merely admits, but invites descriptive details, illustrative anecdotes, personal adventures and sketches of character, all of which serve not only to give life and effect to the pages of the historian, but to impart the colors of truth and reality to the pictures he may present.

While the work thus presents a separate and distinct history, and also exhibits the present state of every nation, ancient and modern, including the recent revolutions in Europe, still, for the purpose of showing how nations have acted upon or influenced the destinies of one another, General Views are given, at suitable periods, presenting the great movement of mankind, as one family, in its onward march from the past to the present time.

It is proper to state, that while the author promises only a compilation, yet he has endeavored to choose from the highest and best authorities; and while the work is offered as a popular treatise, it still seeks to present the practical results of philosophic investigation; and finally, that while justice is rendered to the classic ages, the whole work is written in the spirit of modren civilization—which places justice above power, prefers peace to war, and regards the Christian, rather than the soldier, as the true hero of our race.

The work is illustrated with 700 engravings, designed rather for instruction than mere embellishment. Presenting views of cities, monuments, coins, medals, portraits, weapons of war, vehicles for travelling, dress, religious rites and the manners and customs of ancient and modern times.

With a view to render it more valuable, especially in the family library, an ample chronological table is given, with a full index—containing upwards of four thousand historical and geographical names;—thus rendering it a CYCLOPEDIA OF HISTORY, and UNIVERSAL GAZETTEER, available, for daily and familiar use, as a book of reference.

The work is in one impcial octavo volume, containing 1200 royal 8vo. pages, in double columns, and embraces as much printed matter as six or eight octavo volumes of ordinary extent

AND IS BROUGHT DOWN TO THE YEAR 1854.

The following is a notice of it from the Boston Post:

"Of the excellence and character of the compilation we have heretofore spoken, and can, therefore, do little more at present than to repeat ourselves. Not only the philosophy of history, but geology, geography, and astronomy, are discussed, at reasonable length, in the introductory chapters. Then comes a very interesting essay on physical and political geography, followed by a paper on the antediluvian and patriarchal ages. To this succeeds the history of Asia and Africa, from the earliest period to the present time. Then succeeds, in order, the history of Europe and America. In every respect this "Universal History" is to be commended as a useful compilation. For students, as well as for the general reader, it must prove highly attractive. The illustrations answer every purpose, and really illustrate the text. Although called a "history," and thereby ranked by some people with many a drowsy volume, we can assure our readers that they will scarcely find a more readable book, than this under notice. The compiler is neither dull nor tedious. He does his work briefly and clearly, and, in addition to the historical facts, gives many curious anecdotes and statements regarding the manners, customs, social life, religion, government, costume, sports, amusements and employments, of the different nations of the earth. We advise people to look at the publication. It is just the thing for the general reader, being neither deep, nor verbose, nor stupid. It it a compilation made with taste and skill, as well as with patience and labor."

Certificates.

Without professing myself a believer in all varied departments of Phrenology, a Science to which I have given little or no attention, I yet have pleasure in acknowledging that, myself and family having submitted to an examination at the request of Mr. Persons, he gave us, and that with great readiness, as far as I can judge, a very truthful description of our characters. Conscious defects were pointed out. Those faculties which needed cultivation, and those that had been improved and developed by particular pursuits of studies were named, in cases where he could not have known what these were.

As Mr. P. professes his belief in the atonement of Christ as the only ground of acceptance with God, and in the necessity of the influences of the Holy Spirit to regenerate the soul and to enable us to improve what is defective in us, and in the hope that it may be his object to become practically acquainted with these truths himself, and to cause their influence to be felt in his teachings, I trust that he will meet with success in his classes.

This is to certify that the Bearer, Wm. Persons, is deeply imbued with the spirit and doctrines of Phrenology, has attended my lectures, and read my works; that he has a first rate natural talent for prosecuting this science, that I strongly recommend him, while examining his head, and before I knew him, to follow this science as a permanent profession; that I recommend him to the public as talented and worthy of patronage, and think him capacitated to do good.

Exhibitions and Lectures.

THE Undersigned proposes exhibiting the Diorama of Uncle Tom's Cabin, in the principal Cities, Towns, and Villages in the Northern States and Canada: and to accompany them with abundant evidence as to the truthfulness of the facts assumed by the author, in the work known by that name, which will include the recital of some most mysterious and thrilling incidents in the history of his own family. The flight of his parents for freedom—their capture, and return to slavery and their second flight; a history of their lost boys, who were stolen and sold into slavery—the death of one of them, and the redemption of the other by the purchase of himself; and the final purchase for the enormous sum of five thousand dollars.

The paintings, comprising the scenes of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," are the production of an eminent French artist, and show as large as life, and represent the most prominent scenes and characters in the work.

In order to render our labors more effectual and create more general interest and benefit, we propose the following arrangements, viz:—To give one half of the receipts to any Church or Society, or regularly appointed committee by the puplic, who will provide a place, secure an audience, and defray the expenses incident to the meeting.

An arrangement by which every Church or Society in the country may replenish their funds, aid their pastors, or whatever other benevolent object that commends itself to public patronage.

Let such then who would help the cause, help themselves, and help us in our feeble endeavours to enlist the public ear to the cries of bleeding humanity; go at once to work, communicate immediately with us preparatory to an exhibition.

We shall not however confine ourselves to that deplorable and humiliating aspect of the colored man's case, represented in that work.

But we promise at no distant date, a new programme of very different scenes, representing not only an entirely original, but a far more hopeful aspect of the black man, than has ever been presented to the American public.

It is neither egotism, nor yet flattery, in us to say that this mode of giving instruction possesses the double merit of engaging those two most important faculties that man possesses—the mind and the sight at the same time, and making an ineffacable impression. It is not as being necessarily dependent and degraded, then that, we shall confine our exhibitions of his character.

There have been places where, and times when the black man of modern times has proven himself the patriot, the statesman, and the warrior. As such, then, let him be known to the world, that it may acknowledge it, and to our youth, that they may imitate their example and copy their virtues.

We suffer more perhaps, from false representation, than all other ills put together.

Those amongst us who have acted the part of patriot are represented to be vicious and ungovernable: and those whom the most direful and crushing prejudices have debarred from the opportunities for higher development are represented as submissive willing underlings. Generation after generation are stamped with the same false impressions, and learn to assume it on the one hand, and regard it as a fixed inevitable fact on the other.

We are arranging a new and a very extensive programme of Distinguished Colored Men and the incidents with which they have been connected and acquitted themselves honorably—such as ATTICUS, "the first martyr of the Revolution," the "Colored Regiments at the Battle of New

Poetry.

From the National Era.

THE SLAVE MOTHER.

BY E. JESSUP EAMES.

"When the sexton went to open the grave-yard for a funeral one morning, he found there a slave mother, digging a grave for her infant, which lay by her side, shroudless and coffinless! The mistress of that mother had sent her thus to bury her child, refusing to buy grave-clothes and a coffin!"

Oh! weeping woman of the dark-browed race,
Is it in very truth thy child—thine own?
Can that cold, stark, unyielding form and face
Be flesh of thine own flesh, bone of thy bone?
No shroud or coffin for the tender thing—
And thou, a woman, scooping out its grave!
The heart of mercy bleeds to see thee fling
The broken earth o'er one thou'dst die to save:
Yet not thine own! no mother could be here,
Interring her own dead—alas! thou lookest drear!

Ah, yes! that ice-cold baby oft hath lain,
Nestling and warm, O desolate, on thy bosom—
Thine ever-veering lot of toil and pain
Hath oft been lighted by that perished blossom.
Perchance thou stolest the time to watch beside
The little sufferer in its dying hour,
Struggling thy tears of agony to hide
From cruel eyes, which had eternal power
To wound with heartless sneer, and scorh, and jest,
The sacred sorrows of thy sore-bereaved breast!

And oh! no priestly hand God's Book displays
In this sick hour of dying hope, to cheer thee,
No human eye the burial rite surveys,
Save that the hireling sexton chanceth near thee;
And while thou summon'st strength from thy despair,
To aid thee in this last most solemn task,
Thy mistress doth in awful mockery wear
Her Maker's image, as a screening mask—
She sent thee, groaning 'neath maternal woe;
She knew that thou wert made in God's own likeness, too.

Yet still the passionate pulses of thy heart,
O mourning mother! there is joy for thee:
Thy buried babe hath now nor lot nor part
In thy sad bondage. Lo! thy child is free!
Free as the white-winged messengers of Heaven,
In whose glad company it soareth now;
A precious ransom for its soul is given,
Above all human price! Then droop not thou,
Though doomed for years the Christian's slave to be—
Yet in yon righteous Heaven is forged no chain for thee!

July, 1855.

FREEDOM OF THE SOUL.

'Tis a glorious thing to send abroad,
A soul as free as air,
To throw aside the shackles which
Sectarian bondmen wear:
Ay, fettered not by creed, or clan,
Or gold, or land or sea,
You roam through the world of light and life,
Rejoicing you are free
To recognize the good and true;
The beautiful and grand,
Beneath the blue heavens where you dwell,
And in the distant land.
You love the sunny spot of earth,
Where you drew the breath of life,
But scorn to shed your brother's blood,
In the brutal heat of strife;
For the whole earth is so rich with flowers,
And fair before your sight,
And all as sacred as your own,
You hold your neighbour's right;
For you love the perfect laws of God,
The laws of peace and love,
And would that His will be done on earth
As in the world above.
Your soul breathes ever, Excelsior!—
As clouds pass from your sight:
Oh, wondrous beautiful things you see,
In the clear, immortal light.

THE MIGHT OF TRUTH.

From out the little fountains
There swells a mighty tide,
Upon whose broad, elastic back
The broods of commerce ride;
And on the winged tempest
A little seed there flies,
Whose roots strike—whose giant arms
Reach upward to the skies;
And so the little, slighted Truth,
At length more mighty grown,
Shall fill the nations with its power,
And make the world its own.

There is a flower, when, trampled on,
Doth still more richly bloom—
And even to its bitterest foe
Gives forth its sweet perfume;
The rose that's crushed and shattered
Doth on the breeze bestow
A fairer scent, that further goes
E'en for the cruel blow.
And so Truth's crush'd and trampled flower
By injury stronger grown,
Shall win its very foes to love,
And make the world its own.

O! Truth's fair flower is fanned by sighs,
And nourished by the tears
That on the dungeon's stony floor
Have rained for weary years.
And from the cross and fiery stake
The streams of blood that pour
Have scattered wide its living seeds
To earth's remotest shore,
And thus the scorned and hated Truth,
By injury mightier grown,
Shall fill the nations with its power,
And make the world its own.

The man rejected and despised
Is worshipped and adored—
The felon, scorned and crucified,
Becomes a glorious God!
And bright with gold that blood-stained cross,
The emblem once of shame,
Raised high above all human signs,
Exalts his blessed name.
And thus the Truth, the hated Truth,
Each day still mightier grown,
Doth move the nations by its power,
And make the world its own.

Miscellaneous.

Good Advice for Everybody.

If you your lips
Would keep from slips,
Five things observe with care;
Of whom you speak,
To whom you speak
And how, and when, and where.

Success in Life.

I have heard of two brothers, whose father died, leaving them five hundred dollars apiece. "I will take this money, and make myself a rich man," said Henry, the younger brother. "I will take this money, and make myself a good man," said George the elder. Henry, who knew little beyond the multiplication table, abandoned all thoughts of going to school, and began by peddling, in a small way over the country. He was shrewd, and quick to learn whatever he gave his attention to; and he gave all his attention to making money. He succeeded. In one year his five hundred dollars had become a thousand. In five years it had grown to be twenty thousand; and, at the age of fifty, he was worth a million. Geo. remembered the words of the wise man: "With all thy getting, get understanding." He spent two-thirds of his money in going to school, and acquiring a taste for solid knowledge. He then spent the remainder of his patrimony in purchasing a few acres of land in the neighborhood of a thriving city. He resolved on being a farmer.

After a lapse of thirty five years, the two brothers met. It was at George's house. A bright, vigorous, alert man was George, tho' upwards of fifty-five years old. Henry, tho' several years younger, was very infirm. He had kept in the counting-room long after the doctors had warned him to give up business, and now he found himself stricken in health beyond repair. But that was out of his element when not making money. George took him into the library, and showed him a fine collection of books. Poor Henry had never cultivated a taste for reading. He looked upon the books with no more interest than he would have looked on so many bricks. George took him into his garden but Henry began to cough, and said he was afraid of the east wind. When George pointed out to him a beautiful elm, he only cried: "Pshaw!" George took him into his greenhouse, and t[illegible]ed with enthusiasm of some flowers, w[illegible]ch had given the farmer great pleasure and happiness. Henry shrugged his shoulders and yawned saying; "Ah! I dont' care for these things." George, asked him if he was fond of paintings and engravings. "No, no! Don't trouble yourself," said Henry; "I can't tell one daub from another." "Well, you shall hear my daughter Edith play upon the piano; she is no ordinary performer, I assure you." "Now, don't brother,—don't, if you love me!" said Henry, beseechingly: "I never could endure music." "But what can I do to amuse you? Will you take a ride?" "I am afraid of a horse. But if you will drive me carefully down to your village bank I will stop and have a chat with the president." Poor Henry! Money was uppermost in his mind. To it he had sacrificed every other good thing. When, a few days afterwards, he parted from his farmer brother, he laid his hand on his shoulder, and said: "George, you just support yourself comfortably on the interest of your money, and I have got enough to buy up the whole of your town, bank and all, and yet your life has been a success, and mine a dead failure!" Sad, but true words.—Osborne.

Blessings.

To speak to other men is a blessing. To find out solemn truths and utter them is glorious work. To have our thoughts impressed upon the mind of others originating these fresh thoughts and fancies—to have the creatures of our imagination received as welcome guests by rich and poor alike, is worth a life of toil. And this is the work of your skilful fiction-makers. They cheer the drooping spirit, speak hope and gladness to the downcast heart. No matter that their men and woman, their lives and histories, their thrilling incidents, their pathos and their humour, are made of nothing—if the sunshine of their hearts, the sunshine that makes all nature seem beautiful and good, is on their page—if their multiform lore take this most readable and most delightful shape we welcome it. We ask not how much is false, but how much is true; and, though it be but as a dream of the night, it is a happy dream-land—one that we would not willingly forget. Old ages had their fiction-makers, proud Roman, Stalwart, Saxon and the Norman baron, alike rejoiced in them; and in these days of unchained thought—these days of onward progress and of shining light—we need them, ay, never were those household teachers needed more than now.

The True Nobility of Life.

I shall be governed by circumstances; I do not intend or wish, Anthon, to crowd my boys into the learned professions. If any among them have any particular talent or taste for them, they may follow them. They must decide for themselves in a matter more important to them than to any one else. But my boys know that I snould be mortified if they selected those professions from the vulgar notion that they were more genteel—a vulgar word that ought to be banished from the American vocabulary—more genteel than Agriculture or the mechanical arts. I have laboured hard to convince my boys that there is nothing vulgar in the mechanic's profession; no particular reason for envying the lawyer or the doctor. They, as much as the farmer or mechanic, are working men. And I should like to know what there is particularly elevating in sitting over a table and writing out perscribed forms, or in inquiring into the particulars of disease and dealing out physic.

It is certainly a false notion in a democratic republic, that a lawyer has any higher claim to respectability—gentility if you please—than a tanner, a blacksmith, a painter, or a boulder.—It is the fau't of the mechanic, if he takes a place not assigned him by the government and institutions of the country He is of the lower order only when he is self-degraded by the ignorant coarse manners which are associated with manual labor in countries where society is divided into caste and have, therefore, come to be considered inseparable from it. Rely upon it, it is not so. The old barriers are down. The time has come when being mechanics, we may appear on laboring days, as well as holidays, with the sign of our profession. Talent and worth are the only eternal grounds of distinction. To these the Almighty has affixed hiseverlasting patent of nobility, and these it is which make bright the immortal name to which our children may aspire as well as others. It will be our own fault, Anthon, if in our land, society as well as government is not organized upon a new foundation. But we must secure, by our own efforts, the elevation that are now accessible to all.

The Love of a True Woman.

Oh! the priceless value of the love of a true woman! Gold cannot purchase a gem so precious. Titles and honors confer upon the h[illegible] no such secure happiness. In our darkest moments, when disappointments and in[illegible]e with corroding care gather round, and the gaunt form of poverty menaces with skeleton fingers, it gleams around the soul with an angel's smile. Time cannot mar its brilliancy, distance but strengthens its influence, bolts and bars cannot limit its progress, it follows the prisoner to his cell and sweetens the homely morsal that appeases his hunger, and in the silence of midnight it plays around his heart, and in his dreams he [illegible] to his [illegible] with love's [illegible], though the w[illegible] [illegible] touch. Different Color of the Jews.

Although the Jew becomes the subject of every form of government from the autocracy of Russia to the democracy of America—he retains his [illegible] New Zealand is the most [illegible] for in the backwoods of the New World, and the [illegible] of the British Sovereign, he is instantly known. Into this it is not our province now to enter, yet we cannot help remarking that the Jew is a witness not of one truth, but of many truths. Marvellously does he illustrate the consistency of the original unity of man with the most extensive diversity

His features have been cast in an eternal mould, but his color is dependent on outward causes. Natural law is forbidden to operate on the one, but left to take its course with respect to the other. A fixed physiognomy declares the unity of the people, while their diversity of complexion as distinctly manifest the influence of climate. Every shade of color clothes with its livery the body of a Jew, from the jet black of the Hindoo to the ruddy white of the Saxon. The original inhabitants of Palestine were doubtless dusky skinned and dark haired, but the cooler sky and more temperate air of Poland and Germany, have substituted a fair complexion and light hair. On the other hand, the scorching sun of India has curled and crisped his hair and blackened his skin, so that his features alone distinguish him from the native Hindoo. On the Malabar coast of Hindostan are two colonies of Jews—an old and young colony, separated by color. The elder colony are black, and the younger (dwelling in a town called Mantacheri) comparatively fair, so as to have obtained the name of white Jews. This difference is satisfactorily accounted for by the former having been subjected to the influence of the climate for a much longer time than the latter.—British Quarterly Review

☞ A rich man wears a torn coat, a threadbare vest, or a worn hat; it is proper in him if it best suits his fancy; but a man with moderate means must dress well, or he is despised by his fellows. The former may dress poorly, because he can dress better; the latter must dress well, because he cannot afford it. The man who has more money than he wants can borrow as much as he pleases; the man who has no money and wants it often experiences difficulty in borrowing a dollar. Poverty travels barefooted over a rugged path; industry is harnassed to a carriage and wealth rides in it.

☞ A soul at the point of departure from the body is aptly likened to a little boat afloat in mid-ocean. Below is nought but the vast expanse of water, above the heavens, to which the lonely boatman casts his anxious look. At such a time he feels the most important question to be this: whether the sky of purest azure offers a prospect clear, bright and peaceful; or if it is beset with lowering clouds, in which the vivid lightning's flash portends the approaching storm.

☞ Mrs. Partington, reading an account of a railroad accident, was surprised to learn that the locomotive had been driven off the track by one of the switches. "I should have thought," she said, "that the great iron engine would not have minded such a little thing as a switch." "Yes, but remember, Mama," said Ike, gravely, "that the locomotive has a tender behind." "Oh, indeed!" replied the old lady, resuming her paper, "Well, you needn't talk about it, my son."

☞ Punch says that the greatest "organ" in the world is the organ of speech in woman; an organ too, without a stop!"

The Dignity of the Pastor's Office.

The increased uncertainty of the relation between minister and people, is an alleged reason why men refuse to enter upon or remain in the work. In former times, it was a settlement for life, and upon this its desirableness and worldly respectability in no small part depended. But now, in this country, no political appointment is more uncertain of continuance than the contract between the pastor and the people. Four or five years is said to be the average term of its duration.

Neither the fact nor its pernicious consequences can be denied, and nothing could more clearly show the unworthy light in which the ministerial office is regarded. It is perhaps a natural consequence, as the first working of the voluntary system, and perhaps it is only one of the evidences of that restlessness of mind and love of change which characterizes us as a people. I am inclined to think, however, that it proceeds still more from the undue importance which has come to be attached to the pulpit, and the comparative neglect into which pastoral duties have fallen. To write a good sermon, and read it with tolerable propriety, is regarded as the one essential qualification, to which every thing else is quite subordinate. The pernicious custom of frequent exchange of pulpits makes the hearers critical, and each parish is dissatisfied unless it claims for itself the "best speaker" in the neighborhood. In proportion as ministers consent to this perversion of things, and, for the sake of becoming intellectually, better preachers, become practically neglectful pastors, the evil must increase. The great and peculiar excellence of our profession, and a large part of its usefulness, depend upon the pastoral care. Without this, the preaching itself degenerates into lecturing, and the relation between minister and people becomes more and more superficial and secular. Without performance of the duties of a pastor, although a man may be eloquent, and philosophical, and profound, he can not be a practical and efficient preacher of the gospel. The affection which his people feel for him will be slight, and a few unpopular sermons, if he happens to be an independent man, or the prospect of finding a more attractive speaker, if he happens to be a dull one, will at any time lead to a dissolution of the tie. But what must the condition of our churches gradually become, under the operation of such a system of pastoral neglect and change? The people will gradually look for no pastoral influence, and their minister will have no time or opportunity for using it. The two or three years which would be needed to place him in a position of friendship and trust, are all that he looks forward to, and he declines the labor through having no hope of a harvest. Thus the evil may go on to increase, until hiring preachers by the year becomes the favorite mode of settlement. Instead of a settled ministry, in the sacred relation of pastor and people, it will be an itinerant lectureship with the church for the lyceum, and Sunday for the day of travelling. There are already many persons who prefer instead of being settled with a pastoral care, to live where it may suit their convenience, and make engagements by the week or month, according to the best offers. The same amount of writing thus goes a great deal further, and the whole duty of a pastor is avoided: I might say the whole usefulness of a pastor too, and the excellency and honor of the office.

It is an increasing evil of which I speak, and one for which both people and ministers are to blame. But the cure must come chiefly from the latter. "Though thou teachest another, teachest thou not thyself?" Let the minister take a higher and nobler view of his profession, as the servant of Christ for the saving of souls, and if it be but for a single month, let him strive to become the pastor no less than the preacher, and I think that the evil great as it is, would gradually be removed. Congregations would become less fickle if they loved their minister as a personal friend and adviser, and some dullness in the pulpit would be endured before families would consent to be bereaved. But the faithful pastor is very seldom a dull preacher to those who habitually hear him; for although he may not be eloquent or great, there will be a directness and simplicity and fervor in his words, derived from the realities of the life he leads, by which his hearers will be interested, as by words spoken personally to them, and for their personal improvement. Few men can always satisfy by their preaching, and each one can have but a limited range of ideas. Considered simply as the expression of his own thoughts, he will soon preach himself out, and unless the foundations of his influence are laid in the affection and gratitude of those to whom he ministers, his house is built upon the sand. It is no wonder that, in almost every such case, ministers and people are mutually tired of each other, at the end of five or six years. I do not say that the whole cure of the evil rests with him; but certainly the pastoral relation can never become permanent, except through diligent attention to the pastoral care.

One almost fatal consequence of the state of things to which I have referred, is its tendency to make a hireling ministry. A tariff of prices is fixed for the day's work, and the Sunday's preaching is paid for, on the Sunday perhaps, and in the church, upon the ordinary principles of trade. This may not be wrong in itself, for circumstances may justify it, and the laborer is worthy of his hire; but its tendency as a usual arrangement, and especially when it comes, as it does in some cases, to take the place of all other arrangements, must be to degrade the profession in the eyes of those who give and those who receive. The laborer is worthy of his hire, and they whose whole time is given to the gospel, must live thereby; but the less close the contract is made between the duty performed and the money earned, the more pleasantly and the better will the work be done. In fact, preaching is almost the only part of a minister's duty which can be directly paid for, and the most important duties of his office are such as can not be bought or sold. You or I may be paid for preaching on the next Sunday; but for friendly counsel and faithful rebuke, for sympathy and kindness, for consolation to the bereaved and comfort to the dying, would the insult of payment be offered, and their pecuniary value fixed? In proportion, therefore, as the work of the minister is narrowed down to preaching, it becomes a mercenary work, and the calling of an apostle may rapidly degenerate into a trade.—W. G. Eliot.

True Freedom.

Circumstances cannot enslave those whom character has fully liberated. Nature's diploma and certificate of honorable graduation from her univeristy, popes, kings, peoples, may refuse to acknowledge, but they cannot take it away. What she has said none can unsay, and the attempt but brings into relief the letters of adamant in which her decision was written. Thus it is under deprivation of political right that the essential freedom, the absolute play and harmony of an emancipated spirit, has shone forth with purest glory and power. Orion wears his shining belt by day also, but night alone reveals it.

Thus Romanism seized upon John Knox, and bound him to the galley-oar. One day a monk pressed the image of the Virgin into his palm. From his hand away it spun into the sea. "Let her go down," said the indomitable man. The same Romanism said to the bravest and ablest king of France, "Make thyself in the eyes of all men an apostate and a hypocrite," and with trembling he obeyed. Raleigh in the tower, Bunyan in Bedford jail, Cervantes in a Spanish galley, were free as no convention could constitute them, and, to tesify of it, went forth three works, the History of the world, the Pilgrim's Progress, and the story of Don Quixote. Such trophies never followed a Roman conqueror in his triumph. A soul mighty enough transfigures its chains, wears its manacles as a bride her marrage ring, and compels the long succession of after ages to consecrate the tokens of its seeming ignominies with their homage, with their deepest love, and saddest, sweetest tears. There is a crucifixion; and the cross itself ascends into heaven to shine as chief as the constellations for ever.

Thus, certain greatest spirits having entered into the realm of his higher freedom, found therein all immunities, as the light of all the planets is in the sun. "He affirms"—so the crowned caitiff of Sicily complained of Plato—"that a just man must be happy in the state of Slavery, as well as in that of freedom." Nor let us, with Dionysius, fancy the satement inexcusable, though our tongue falter in repeating it. The great soul knew what he was saying, and his words were weighed in a balance such as few minds or times could ever supply. Indeed, he had the opportunity to put them to a practical test; but we do not learn that his deeds disgraced his speech. We behold him bound and borne over the barking seas; but can as soon pity the eternal azure in time of storm, or stars that shine in the cold heaven upon wintry nights. So Epictetus was a slave, and took a broken limb from the blows of his "master;" his name is now coupled with that of the good emperor, Marcus Antonius; these were the two last great royal souls of stoicism, and they sail down the stream of time together, monarch ships, majestic still upon that tide whose relentless lips have closed over so many a huge and haughty craft.—*Chris. The Colored Wesleyan Churches.

On Tuesday, at noon, the Rev. Messrs. Singleton, T. Jones, Joseph J. Clinton, and Rev. David Stevens, were formally introduced to his Honor the Mayor, at his office, City Hall, Washington, when one of them addressed him as follows:—

Respected Sir: We are present, as the pastors and representatives of the colored Wesleyan churches and connection in the city of Washington, D. C., for the purpose of presenting to your Honor, for the relief of the afflicted and suffering inhabitants of the cities of Norfolk and Portsmouth, Va, a small sum collected for that purpose, on the morning of the 10th inst., at a camp meeting of the above denomination, held on the camp ground of Mr. Scaggs, under the direction and control of their pastor [Rev. David Stevens, and the officiary of Union Wesley station.

Notice having been given on the day previous, a charity sermon was delivered by Rev. J. J. Clinton, pastor of John Wesley station, from Galations, 6th chapter and 10th verse; after which, the congregation voluntarily contributed the sum of thirty-four dollars, or more, which we now present you on their behalf. They furthermore desire us to assure you, Sir, and the sufferers to whose relief we have contributed, and for whom they cherish those kindly feelings which humanity and religion inspire, that their continual prayers shall be directed to Almighty God, that this pestilential storm may subside—that the balmy wings of health may overshadow the entire nation—and that pure religion, undisturbed peace, and increasing prosperity, may prevail throughout our common country.

The Mayor of Washington replied, that this was the third contribution received from the colored population. They [the Committee] knew as well as he did, that five out of six of the present population of the cities of Norfolk and Portsmouth are colored, and therefore whatever contributions have been and are to be made will be appropriated, for the greater part, to their assistance. He was proud to say, that our colored population will stand up and perform their duty to the extent of their ability. This contribution, just presented, of thirty-four dollars, was equal to a thousand from any other quarter, all the circumstances being considered; in other words, a fair proportion of the generous gifts for the relief of suffering humanity. He considered their contribution liberal, and should take great pleasure in mentioning it in connection with others.

The Committee retired, apparently pleased with their courteous reception. We happened to be present, and were much gratified with the proceedings.—W. Star.

HAYTI.

A correspondent of the New York Tribune, writing from Port-au-Prince, under date of 17th ult., informs us that the Emperor Soulonque has founded in that city an institution called the 'Maison Centrale,' for the purpose of instructing youth in mechanical occupations, and that it is proving successful. It is under the direction of Baron Nathaniel Montgomery, an intelligent colored man from Baltimore, whose father emigrated to Hayti from the United States during the latter part of the last century. He is described as possessing extensive chemical and mechanical acquirements. The institution contains a foundry, smith shop, and a saw mill. This seems like beginning the work of civilization afresh, but it has been rendered necessary in Hayti by the absolute ignorance of the people respecting all the improved arts of mechanics, manufactures and even agriculture. Repeated efforts have been made in Hayti, both by the government and by individuals, to remedy this, but failure has been the result. Companies have been formed at various times, and thousands of dollars expended in purchasing and importing machinery from France, England, and the United States, to establish steam saw and sugar mills, but each attempt has been in turn abandoned on account of the absence of scientific and practical knowledge requisite to sustain such undertakings.

One saw mill company formed in 1845 was under the auspices of President Boyers. A tanning company went into operation about the same time, but both fell through. In 1849 the Emperor and Minister of Justice had a company formed to conduct a sugar plantation, but it also accomplished nothing. Under the presidency of Riche, a scientific agriculturist was hired in England by the government, and supplied with men and implements to conduct a model farm, and two master stone masons and an architect were also imported from England to introduce improvements in the construction of edifices. Riche also purchased in England an iron steamer, and in the United States a wooden one, and during the last twelve years ten other vessels have been bought, but the vessels have gone to pieces for want of practical knowledge to manage them, and the scientific agriculturist, architect and masons failed in their objects. The latest effort of Soulouque, in the establishment of the industrial college, may prove more successful. About eighteen steam sugar mills are in operation in various parts of Hayti, and five more are being erected in the vicinity of L'Arcahaye and Port-au-Prince.

Annexation to Canada.

Five years ago, Earl Grey issued an official despatch to Lord Elgin, ordering him to arrest for treason all who were officious in leading public sentiment for the annexation of Canada to the United States. It had the effect to silence the "Liberalists" for the time, but the slumber of five years has again been awakened. Annexation is revived and freely conversed about as a general topic; it is intimated, that soon a Convention of the people will be called to agitate the subject more practically.—Rochester Democrat.

Do tell! We are sleepy for sartin, brother Jonathan, but we don't wish to be disturbed; please to let us snoose a leetle spell longer, it is refreshin' to the nervous system. We haint nothin' to disturb us in this "kedentry" 'cept yir Know Nothing yells and shrummages, when you do actively give the furriners jess. The shouts, too, of yir fugitive slaves, as they fling up their heels and caps, and yell for liberty and Queen Vic as soon as they touch free sile, also makes us more watchful and wakeful than you'd think. You couldn't do nothin' with this Canada if you was annexed; you know we aint no account. To be sure we tuk the first prize at Paris, and our wheat goes 68 lbs. to the bushel, but that aint nothin' of course. Then our Canada thistles is a tall vegetable, and you'd find 'em awful stingers, even more so than yir keen edged Frank Pierce. Besides the thistles, and the 40,000 fugitives, and the Indians, and the furrin folks, there's a awful slew of Native Canadians, and their motto is, "Canada for Canadians!" and they mean to die in that faith, so you can hush up cousin Dem; you don't know beans.

From the Liberator.

The Dissolution of the Union Essential to the Abolition of Slavery.

I do not despair of the triumph of the truth. The slaves in our country are to be set free—that is as certain as that man is man, and God is God. Slavery is doomed, let this country do what it may. But will it go down peaceably? Will the nation relax its grasp willingly? Will it hear the warning voice, and obey the Divine command? Or will it go on, and add iniquity to iniquity, and multiply slaves for the auction block, and extend the slave system, until its doom is irrevocably sealed? That is the question. I know that our success in the anti-slavery cause has been extraordinary, within the last quarter of a century; I know that, having nothing but the simple truth to begin with, with all that is wealthy, and mighty, and powerful, in Church and State combined against us, our march has been right onward. And yet there is such a thing as a nation sinning away its day of grace, so that it is not possible for it to recover itself. There has never yet been made a direct and true issue by the North against slavery. Every thing has been and is in the spirit of compromise. In one-half of the country, we have lost our right of speech; the liberty of conscience is cloven down; editors are driven into exile, and their presses destroyed; the Gospel is fettered, and its mouth-piece gagged; and all compacts and agreements are perfidiously overturned. All this is the legitimate fruit of the tree; and unless we lay the axe at the root of the tree, and cut it down, and give it to the consuming fire, we shall do nothing—we are lost. I thank God for any kind of opposition to slavery, and am glad that any issue is raised; and I will respect every honest effort in behalf of freedom. But, until we cease to strike hands religiously, politically and governmentally with the South, and declare the Union to be at an end, I believe we can do nothing even against the encroachments of the Slave Power upon our rights. When will the people of the North see that it is not possible for liberty and slavery to commingle, or for a true Union to be formed between freemen and slaveholders? Between those who oppress and the oppressed, no concord is possible. This Union—it is a lie, an imposture, and our first business is, to seek its utter overthrow. In this Union, there are three millions and a half of slaves, clanking their chains in hopeless bondage. Let the Union be accursed! Look at the awful compromises of the Constitution, by which that instrument is saturated with the blood of the slave! But even if every word of it were unexceptionable, the fact would be none the less palpable, that it is not a question of parchment, but of moral possibilities. 'How can two walk together, except they are agreed?' We are against slavery. The slaveholders say to us, 'If we catch you south of Mason and Dixon's line, we will lynch you.' They declare that no man shall be put into office, who does not go for everlasting and universal slavery. How great the insanity of the North! Like Samson, it has foolishly revealed the secret of its strength, ay, and the source of its weakness; and the Philistines of the South have taken it captive, put out its eyes, and made it grind in the prison-house for them; and if, at last it shall rise in its returning strength, it will be to fee for the pillars of this heaven-accursed Union, and bring it to the ground. Samson told Delilah that if she should cut off his locks, he would be weak as other men. Then, said the Philistines, we know where the secret of his strength lies; and the deed was done.

O, the folly and infatuation of the people of the North! For sixty-eight years, we have been telling the slaveholders that we consider the preservation of the American Union paramount to all other considerations! 'Do what you will for the extension of slavery, or the subversion of our own rights, there is one thing we mean to do, and that is, always to stand by the Union! For that, we will give up everything—conscience, self-respect, manhood, liberty, all! 'We ask nothing more,' say the slaveholders; 'that is a carte blanc in our hands to wield against you with omnipotent effect; it is all we want to know. We will have the Fugitive Slave bill. We know you will wince, and remonstrate, and threaten; but we have only to crack the whip of disunion over your heads, to bring you down on your knees at once. We will repeal the Missouri Compromise. We expect you to rave and resist; but you will yield the point, like whipping spaniels, when we threaten to dissolve the Union. You have agreed that, to save the Union, you will be submissive to the end.' And so, all over the North, there is not a political party that does not say, 'We are for the Union.' The new 'fusion' or 'republican' party reiterates the cry of the South, 'The Union, it must and shall be preserved.' What is this but the betrayal of liberty into the hands of the Philistines? Talk about restoring the Missouri Compromise! As well talk of causing the sun and moon to stand still! Talk of repealing the Fugitive Slave bill! 'When the sky falls, we will catch larks.' talk about stopping the progress of slavery, and of saving Nebraska and Kansas!—Why, the fate of Nebraska and Kansas was sealed the first hour Stephen Arnold Douglas consented to play his perfidious part. I hold that any man who talks of a Union with slaveholders, such as they prescribe, has no right to call himself a friend of the slave. In becoming an Abolitionist, I pledged myself to stand by the side of the slave, and make his case my own; and I will not support a Constitution from which he is excluded. I will go in for no Union in which he is doomed to clank his fetters. I will give allegiance to no Government which does not protect his rights with my own. Therefore, I stand outside of this Government, and, by the help of God, I mean to effect its overthrow. That seems to me to be the only consistent course to be taken. 'No Union with Slaveholders!' Why? Because they will have no Union with us, unless we will join in their villany. I do not know what anti-slavery men mean by saying they are opposed to slavery, and yet for preserving the Union. The colored man who glorifies the Union which makes him an outlaw, is beside himself. Our first duty is to pronounce the American Union accursed of God—to arraign every man who supports it, and tell him, as Jesus told the rich young man in the Gospel, that whatever else he may have done, one thing he yet lacketh: he must give up his support of the Union. Why continue the experiment any longer? It is all madness and delusion; let this slaveholding Union go; and when it goes, slavery will go down with it. Whatever stands in the way of freedom, I am for its overthrow. The slaveholders are powerless without us. It is the North, after all, which has done this evil work. Our business is with ourselves. The people of the North hold in their hands the key whereby the dungeon's door may be opened, and the slaves set free. We have little to do with the slaveholders. I do not address myself to them; they are incapable of hearing or understanding our arguments; they are insane men. My appeal is not to them, but to the people of the North, who are the props and the pillars of the slave system. Let our rallying cry be, 'No Union with Slaveholders, religiously or politically!' Let us up with the flag of disunion, that we may have a free Northern Republic of our own, by the side of which no slaveholding despotism can exist, and when that hour shall come, God will have made it possible for us to be one people from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Slaves Emancipated.

Twenty-three negroes emancipated from slavery by the last will of the late Miss Ann W. Talliafero, of King William county, Va., passed through Wheeling, on Monday week, on their way to Mt. Pleasant, Ohio. The Wheeling Intelligencer says that each one, by the will of Miss. T. is entitled to a legacy of $150, to be applied in defraying the expenses of their removal and location in the State of Ohio.

The Way to do Colored Canadians Good.

We have long thought of, and been deeply oppressed with what, seems to us, to be the cause of failure, to do the colored people, of Canada, good, by the efforts of their friends.

It is very clear to us, that God's plan to benefit a certain people, or our race, as a whole, is the very best one that can possibly be adopted, to secure that end. We attribute the failure of our friends, to do us as a people, the good, they intended to do us, to their oversight to adopt God's mode to accomplish the work. It seems to us, that their FIRST efforts should have been to convert the people to Christ, instead of the mere intellectual education of them. Had they succeeded in that, and it is certain that they might have done so, then, the people themselves would have become fellow-helpers to the work, which, to us, is indispensably necessary to success to any great degree. Such conversion would have fixed ersably upon them a sense of their own obligation. It would induce them to act from principle. Their acts would have been consistent, progressive, and beneficial. We do not mean to say that so much has not been true to some extent, but only, that, it would have been more so, in view of the end that ought to be attained. To accomplish such an end, too, teachers should have been selected from the religious denominations, TO WHICH THE PEOPLE BELONGED, among which they were to labour. It is a fact, that the colored people, of Canada, are almost entirely of the Baptist or Methodist persuasion, and nearly all the teachers sent among them have been either Presbyterians or Congregationalists. No one need wonder at their failure, since black people have conscientious conviction of their duty, as well as white ones! We thank our Presbyterian and Congregational friends for what they intended to do, for us. They meant well! But we must admonish our Baptist and Methodist friends, that they are sadly in fault, since they neglected their duty, and done but little or nothing for us, when they have been earnestly entreated to do something; nor are our "Free Mission Baptist" friends, even to be excused, in this case.

The SECOND great truth that our people need to be taught is the nature, value, and dignity of humanity. We must know its nature, to properly appreciate it! We must know its value to be induced to take suitable care of it! We must know its dignity to lead us, to develop, adorn, and sanctify it! Ignorance of such a subject has wrought nearly the ruin of more people than the colored people. To it may be attributed nearly all the demoralizing influences, to which, human nature is subjected. To leave us, in the road to ruin, and while in it, we must be careless, restless, and degraded.

The THIRD point of instruction, we need, is on the duties growing out of the relations, we sustain to God, our families, to the church and state! Let us know the relation, we sustain, and we will respect the duty arising from it. Whatever may be true of the Sovereignty of God, and the destiny of man, still, to us, it is clear, all must turn upon OUR DUTY DONE, OR NOT DONE. It is fatal to any people, to be ignorant of the relation, they sustain to their Creator, Redeemer, and King, and the ruins, of duty not done, must follow, in the absence of such information. There is but little hope of family success, until its member understand their relations to it, and be induced, by the obligation, they impose, to discharge their duties in it. The mission of the church, in our world, is too important, for us, not to know our relations to it. Its existence, on earth, will depend upon its members doing their duty. What would our world be without a Christian church in it? and is that a Christian church, in which its members perform not their duty? Our relations to our country are various, and the duties, from such, are many and onerous. To be patriots, or lovers of our country, we must know it, and our relations to it. To have our country love us, we must do our duty to it. We must at least help to refine its society, develop its resources, and defend its interests!

We are firm believers in the spirit-world, and in things eternal and unseen." Hence, the FOURTH point of importance, to us, is, to give us such information as is revealed respecting these things, and not the fancy of of a prolific imagination when religiously excited, as has been too frequently the case with our religious teachers. The things that belong to immortality, and eternal life, we would know, and be guided to obtain them. We need instruction about heaven, while on earth, and how to use the latter to obtain the former.

Who among the saints below,
That to the church their time has given,
Will to us, the needed show,
The use of earth, and way to heaven?

We hold that intellectual education is to be subservient to such an end, or it is worse than no education at all; hence, with us, the FIFTH point of great interest, is, a physical education. Mark! the fifth point, not the first one!! The great error of our friends has consisted in making it FIRST. It is the error of missionaries generally TO EDUCATE THE HEATHEN FIRST, in order to their becoming Christians, when they should make their Christians first, in order to their being properly educated. Such a plan does not meet with God's approbation, and there should not be much regret at its failure! Such a plan will do for heaven, not earth, in its present state, and especially that part of it called Canada! We want laborers among us of the right sort, and who will commence their work in the right way. Such persons will do us good. We ask our friends in the name of God, and our wronged humanity, shall we have them?

☞ We intimated last week that the war was ended between the "Black Saxon" and Dawnites; perhaps we were misinformed about the offensive Agent having left the country, &c. It is true he has rented out the Dawn property to his white servant, as it is said,—not allowing Daddy Joe one acre, though he is desirous of it, for wheat. The said Agent is still here. We saw him at the door of the Methodist Meeting-house in Dawn, giving it to Brother Nero, his former friend, on last Sabbath. A gentleman remarked to us, he ought to be taken up and prosecuted for disturbing religious meetings on the Lord's-Day—a good idea, for he should leave that for other than a Parson. Should he remain in Canada, as the Missionary of A FEW ENGLISH QUAKERS, as he is, we fear the war is not ended yet.

☞ We shall be pleased to publish respectable articles from "The Dodgers," or any one of them, as a review of our notice of their meeting, held in Chatham, not long since; but the abusive, ungentlemanly article of H. C. Jackson, we cannot condescend to publish. We are not in the habit of disgracing ourselves, by noticing any effort made against us, by a would-be-somebody, who has nothing else to do in exhibiting his self-conceit, but to abuse women and ministers of the Gospel, and we should not have done so in this case, only the contemptible fellow has got out of his place, and slipped into respectable society. He would do better to continue to act the part of a lick spittle to his master, John.

☞ We are grateful to our numerous white subscribers for their sympathy and support, and we hope their example in this matter will be imitated by our own people more than has been. The Freeman, to make it what it ought to be, requires more help. Will not each reader try to get at least one new subscriber for us, with MONEY IN ADVANCE. We need money more than subscribers, and especially the non-paying ones! Farmers, don't forget, we will take produce for pay!

☞ The National Convention of Colored men, which recently met at Philadelphia, Pa., from published accounts of it, was quite a disorderly body, and broke up without doing a great deal for either "The Industrial School" or the Nationality of the Colored Americans.

☞ Have our many correspondents forgotten us? We hope Bro. J. I. Gains has not finished his emigration theory. We are old friends and have in times past had each other by the horns. Let us try it again!

☞ We take the following resolution of approval of the "PROVINCIAL FREEMAN," from the Minutes of the "Canadian Anti-Slavery Baptist Association," held recently with the Church at Dawn:—

Resolved,—That we will do what we can to sustain the Provincial Freeman, and to give it a wide-spread influence.

We hope our Baptist brethren will not forget the above resolution.

Correspondence.

The Dawn Committee.

To the Editor of the Provincial Freeman.

MR. EDITOR,—SIR:—Permit me to say, through your valuable paper, that the Autocrat of Dawn, Mr. Scoble, and a certain well-trained "Boo-ba," came to Chatham, and hunted up the Brown Committee, who published the Call for the Convention, and told them, if they did not take back what they had done, that the consequences would be very serious—since they had violated the law of their adopted country, &c., in trying to get what did not belong to them; but if the said Committee would retract to them, personally, they would be satisfied. And further, that some of the said Committee did so far forget themselves, in the presence of those rulers of Dawn, as to retract, with their hats under their arms, and heads hung down—saying, "I am most heartily sorry for the position I took, and if I can get out of it, I will never meddle with Dawn again, sirs, unless it be in your favor." Further, Mr Editor, there are some also who regard it as an honor to converse with those gentlemen and to tap them on the shoulder, and say, "Don't mind those who make such ado, about Dawn, you can back them out from their purpose." Allow me to add, that I believe there are colored men in and about Chatham as well qualified to conduct the Dawn School, as either Henson or Scoble There are some, who charge Rev. J. H. Young of slipping from the harness; but if some of the said Committee had stood firm to the plow, as he did, it would have been better for them, though they do say, beware! for J. C. Brown is after you.

PROGRESS OF THE WAR.

BRILLIANT VICTORY OF THE TURKS.

A telegraphic despatch has been received at the Foreign office from Viscount Stratford de Redcliffe, dated Therapia, October 12, stating that the Russians attacked Kars on the 29th of September, and were repulsed, after a conflict of seven hours, with a loss of 2500 killed, and twice that number wounded. Upwards of 4000 muskets were left on the field. The loss of the Turks about 700 killed and wounded.

The following despatch has been received by his excellency the Ottoman minister at London:—

"Constantinople, October 13.—An official report received from the general commanding at Kars, under date of the 29th ult. announces the following:—The Russians had attacked Kars the same day. The combat lasted eight hours; and during the struggle, which could not have been of a more deadly character, the enemy, after repeated efforts made with its full strength succeeded in entering some of the batteries, but was repulsed with very heavy losses. After having made considerable efforts, the Russians were compelled to yield before the courage of our brave soldiers, and to retire in a state of complete confusion. In addition to the dead and wounded removed during the action, 4000 were left in the trenches and the environs of the fortress; 100 prisoners were made, and one cannon captured. Our losses amounted to 700 or 800 men, amongst whom we have to deplore the death of several superior officers. The Russians are preparing to retreat, and to abandon the siege."

HAMBURG, October 15.—A private despatch has been received here, purporting to be authentic, which states that, in consequence of the defeat of the 29th of September; the Russians are preparing to reatreat, having resolved to raise the siege of Kars. The battle was fought with extraordinary animosity on the part of the Russians, who confess to only 400 killed.

Bombardment of Kinburn.

ST. PETERSBURG, Tuesday, Oct. 16.—Telegraphic despatches received by the government announce that on Monday, the 15th inst., the allies landed at Cape Kinburn, near the Salt Lakes; but their number was not considerable. In the evening, six allied steamers cannonaded the fortress of Kinburn, which successfully replied to their fire, and damaged one steamer. From the Crimea there is no news of importance. The allies continue to occupy the heights facing the valley of Baidar.

We have received another Russian account of a new opperation of the allied fleet. On the 15th the English landed a small force at Kinburn, not far from the Salt Lakes. In the evening six steamers began to bombard Kinburn; the fortress replied, and one vessel was injured. On the 16th a cannonade took place between the fortress of Kinburn and the gunboats of the allies. So much is to be gathered from the purport of the despatch from St. Petersburg. It is evident that these attacks, whatever may be their object, have not been brought to a close. In a few hours we may hear of some more important operations. Our readers need not be informed that the presence of the fleet in this quarter points to some attempt against two fortified towns in which the strength of the enemy chiefly lies. Kinburn is situated at the extreme western point of a peninsula which forms the southern shore of the estuary of the Dnieper. On the opposite side is the celebrated Oczakoff, the capture of which by Catharine gave rise to a singular episode in our Parliamentary history. The projection of these promontories and the shallowness of the water leave only a narrow channel, of less than a mile in width, by which the Dnieper and the Bug can be reached. The water near Oczakoff and Kinburn is nowhere more than four fathoms in depth, and immediately the gulf of the Dnieper is entered it shoals to three fathoms. About 60 miles east of the entrance stands Cherson, at the head of the delta of the Dnieper, to the north of a wilderness of marshy islands. The Bug flows into the gulf of the Dnieper, and about 35 miles up the Bug is Nicholaieff, the building yard of the Black Sea fleet, Kinburn and Oczakoff therefore form the towers of the gate which leads to two of Russia's most important military towns. It has been generally said that Odessa is the storehouse which supplies the Russian armies in the Crimea. We believe this notion to be only partially correct; indeed, a little examination will show that the town does not lie between the chief corn-growing districts and the Crimea; and that supplies would be taken out of their way by being carried to Odessa. There is every reason to believe that Nicholaieff, and still more, Cherson, are the chief granaries of the Russian armies, or at least through them one line of the convoys passes which have so long supplied Sebastopol. It is with great satisfaction, therefore, that we learn that this important quarter has been threatened by the Allied fleet, and we hope that the Admirals have the means of striking a heavy blow within the present year. It is now evident that the appearance before Odessa was a feint, no doubt intended to draw off troops from Oczakoff. The Allied force on board the fleet is said to consist of several thousand men, of whom 3,500 are British troops. It appears to be a part of the British force which has made good its landing in the neighbourhood of Kinburn; but the results of the expedition, will, no doubt depend mainly on the number and efficiency of the smaller vessels. The telegraphic despatch from Odessa a few days since stated that eighty vessels were in sight of the harbour; it may therefore be concluded that nearly the whole force of gunboats and steamers is employed on the expedition. Both France and England have lately sent a large number of these craft into the Black Sea, and the last recorded exploits is given on our impression of this day. On the 24th of September Admiral Bruat despatched Commander Bouet with 10 gunboats, a despatch-boat, and a steamer against Tamen and Fanagoria, which stands near each other on the eastern shore of the Straits of Kertch. This small force sufficed to destroy the towns, in spite of 800 Cossacks. Every building which could shelter the Russian troops on the Kuban during the winter was demolished, a quantity of cannon was taken, and a great advantage gained, without, as it appears, the loss of a single man. The position of Yenikale is by this operation rendered more secure during the period at which the straits may be frozen. These gunboats have probably by this time been added to the force off the mouth of the Dnieper. The Emperor of the French sent out during the summer a considerable number of the Rhone steamboats, and their small draught of water will allow them to ascend the stream in spite of natural and artificial obstacles. It may be hoped, therefore, that the allies will be able not only to reduce Kinburn, but to carry out operations against the cities which it protects. The frosts of the ensuing winter may set in sufficiently early to retard the work for a time, but the country will be glad to learn that at least a commencement has been made. We trust soon to announce the destruction of both Kinburn and Orzikoff.

Destruction of Two Russian Towns.

The Moniteur contains a report from Admiral Bruat, of October 2nd, showing that an expedition against Taman and Fanagoria, in the Kertch Straits, had completely succeeded. On the 24th of September Commandant Bouet left Kertch for Taman, with ten gunboats, an aviso, and a steamer. On arriving off Fangoria he threw some shells into the redoubt, and proceeded to disembark about a mile from the fort. During this interval the Russians abandoned the place, and the Allies took possession of it in the presence of a force of cavalry from 600 to 800 strong, which retired immediately. A few shells were thrown among them. On the following day our troops were employed in destroying all the houses in Fanagoria that could have been converted into shelter for troops. At Cape St. Paul, 66 cannons and 4 mortars were found in the fort. At Taman there were eleven 24-pounders left in the sand. By the 2nd October, the destruction of Taman and Fanagoria was complete. The expedition was about to return to Kertch.

Gen. Simpson encloses the following account of the same operations, in a despatch to Lord Panmure:—

YENIKALE, Sept. 27.

SIR.—I have the honour to acquaint you, for the information of his Excellency General Simpson, that three companies of the 71st Regiment, under command of Major Hunter, 71st Regiment embarked at Kertch on Monday last, the 24th inst, on board Her Majesty's ship Minna, at an early hour in the morning, and proceeded, in company with her Majesty's gunboats Lynx, Snake, Arrow and Harpy, together with about nine (9) French Gunboats, conveying six companies of French infantry, to the opposite coast, and arrived about 11 o'clock a.m., opposite Taman, the line of gunboats extend ing a short distance to the eastward of Fanagoria.

The landing commenced shortly afterwards to the eastward of Fanagoria, covered by the fire from the gunboats. There was no resistance offered, and the place had been evidently but lately evacuated. A few mounted Cossacks and infantry were the only people we had seen up to the time of landing, and who were driven from Fanagoria and Taman by the well directed fire from the gunboats.

When the disembarkation was completed, (which was effected without accident) the force moved upon Fanagoria, and took quiet possession of the fort and buildings, and established itself there. A few stores were found still in the place, but (with the exception of a hydraulic press and some medicines) of no particular value, consisting principally of hospital bedding and some clothing and accoutrements. There were, however, upwards of 62 pieces of artillery (9 and 12 pounders, apparently) and four mortars, all rendered unserviceable.

As the force entered Fanagoria a strong party of Cossacks appeared on the hill side, about one and a half or two miles from the town, increased from time to time until their force appeared to amount to about 600. The gunboats Lynx, Arrow and Snake immediately opened a fire upon them, as did also some of the French boats. The practice from these boats was most admirable, and the Cossacks immediately withdrew beyond the crest of the hills, leaving only a few videttes on the neighboring ridge.

Early on the following morning, the men were employed in collecting wood for fuel and hutting, the night having passed quietly, with one exception, the enemy having taken advantage of the darkness to approach our lines, and opened fire upon our sentries; our troops were instantly on the alert, and the Cossacks retired. One man—an English sailor serving at a field piece in the works, was slightly wounded in the heel.

The quantity of wood for fuel and hutting is something considerable, but the exact amount can scarcely be arrived at yet, but I hope to have the whole embarked by Saturday.

I have, &c.,

The Cavalry Affair near Eupatoria.

The French Minister of War has received the following report from Marshal Pelissier.—

"M. le Marechal,—In my despatch of the 29th of September I stated to your Excellency that I had sent General d'Allonville to Eupatoria with three regiments of his division of cavalry (the 4th Hussars, the 6th and 7th Dragoons, and a battery of Horse Artillery;) I then expressed the hope that the able activity of this General, seconded with zeal by the Muchir, Ahmet Pacha, would succeed in dispersing the troops the Russians have retained in the vicinity of Eupatoria, and chief lines of the communication between Simpheropol and Perekop.

"A brilliant cavalry engagement took place on the 29th of September at Koughil, (five leagues north-east of Eupatoria,) in which the Russian cavalry under Gen. Korf was completely defeated. This action inaugurates very auspiciously the series of operations of which Eupatoria will now be the pivot.

"According to a previous arrangement between Gen. d'Allonville and Ahmet Pacha three columns quitted Eupatoria on the 29th, at three in the morning, to march against the enemy.

"The first, directed to the south-east, took up its position at the extremity of the isthmus, towards Saki. It had only a few squadrons of the enemy before it, which it easily drove back with the aid of the two guns which supported the column by their fire.

"The second, commanded by Ahmet Pacha in person, passing by Oraz Atchin, and Teiech, advanced upon Djolchak, destroying in its march all the stores of the enemy.

"The third column, at the head of which was General d'Allonville, was composed of twelve squadrons of his division, of Armand's Battery (of Horse Artillery,) 200 irregular cavalry, and six Egyptian Battalions. It crossed one of the arms of Lake Sasik, and marched by Chiean upon Djollchak, the general rendezvous, where the two last columns joined each other about ten in the morning.

"These columns had driven before them the Russian squadrons, which had successively fallen back upon thir Reserves. During the halt ordered to Refresh the horses, General D'Allonville observed the movements of the enemy, who, with eighteen squadrons, several troops of Cassacks, and artillery, endeavoured to turn his right by advancing between him and the lake.

"General d'Allonville, supported in the rear by two regiments of Turkish cavalry, the six Egyptian battalions, immediately directed his force upon the point of the lake, so as to surround the enemy himself. The promptitude of this movement enabled the 4th Regiment of Hussars, the first line of which was led by General Walsin Esterhazy, to make a close attack on the enemy, while General Champeron, with the 6th and 7th Dragoons, in the second and third line, advanced on the Russian Lancers, and compelled them to a precipitate retreat, during which our troops harassed them for a distance of more than two leagues.

"The enemy being unable to keep their ground on any point, and flying in every direction, General d'Allonville halted the squadrons, and, before retiring, collected all that the Russians had abandoned on the field of battle.

"As the results of the action, we have taken six guns (three cannon and three mortars,) 12 caissons, and one field forge, with their horses and harness; 169 prisoners, of whom one is an officer, Lieutenant Procopvitch of the 18th Lancers, and 250 horses.

"The enemy left on the field about 50 killed; among them was recognised Colonel Andreawski, of the 18th Lancers, of the division of General Korf, who commanded in this engagement, and who has the reputation in the Russian army of being a cavalry officer of great merit. Our loss, in comparison, is very small; we have 6 killed and 29 wounded; M. Pujade, aide-de-camp of General Walsin, and M. de Sibert de Cornillon, ordnance officer of the same General, are among the latter.

"This brilliant action does honor to the regiments engaged in it, as well as to Generals Walsin and de Champeron to d'Allonville, who speaks in high terms of the support he received from Acmet Pacha, and the Turkish corps under his command.

"Received, Monsieur, &c.,
"PELISSIER,
"Marshal, Commander-in-Chief."

News from Sebastopol not important, principally relating to the manœuvres of the two armies.

IF YOU WOULD BE RICH,

GOOD morrow, friend—I'm a stranger in your borough, can you inform me where I can get a pair of good boots made?"

"Yes, sir, I can; just go to T. W. WILSON'S, King St. East, Chatham, next to Smith's Grocery; that's the place; he'll accommodate you most satisfactorily."

"Well, how is your judgment in regard to the quality of boots and shoes?"

"Most excellent—I'm an old boot and shoe maker; many are the days that I've drawn the cords."

"Where did you say I could find him?"

"Why, the next door to Mr. Andrew Smith's Grocery, corner of King and William Streets, East,—any person can tell you."

"Will you conduct me there?"

"I will with pleasure; for I know him to be, from experience, one of the best manufacturers of BOOTS AND SHOES in town. His stock is of his own manufacture, and he has always on hand a superior quality for gentlemen's wear. He's also very particular in getting up his work; so I'm confident he can't fail to give reasonable satisfaction to those who favor him with their patronage."

"There are some bout makers whose work is beautiful to the eye, but plaguy pinching to the feet; and I have lumps upon each instep, which in foul weather give me excruciating pain."

"Ah, yes, too much have I suffered by fetters from the boot moulders hands; but he's not one of them; he endeavours to make a systematic fit, measuring from joint to heel, and from lump to toe—closely observing the most minute protuberance, if there be any upon the feet; and he seldom fails to make his boots set as easy thereon as a glove upon a lady's tender finger. Besides, he always keeps a superior stock on hand; perhaps you might obtain a pair upon the instant, that would fit your feet and please the eye."

"Then I must try him."

"Try him, of course, and you'll save at each end of your bargain. First—you'll buy cheaper—secondly, your boots will wear you longer."

"Come, let's go."

"I'm ready—Are you a cash man?"

"I am; for he who pays cash clips the discount of credit, and secures it in his own pocket."

"Then that's the place, for his motto reads"—

Ask of me no trust, when you come to buy;
Ask of me no trust, for you I must deny;
Ask of me no trust, it hath destroyed many;
Ask of me no trust, I cannot grant you any;
Ask of me no trust, but with your cash rally;
Ask of me no trust, nor with my pocket dally.

A MORE "IMPORTANT NOTICE!"

American Tract Society—Slavery.

THE Independent, of New York, in an article in that paper, of the 15th March, being one of a continuation of articles regarding the "American Tract Society," has this sentence:—"For thirty years, one of the greatest institutions of Evangelical Christendom, has been testifying in effect, that the institution of Slavery, the buying and selling of human beings, and the profession of the slave-trader, are less offensive to God, less contary to the Gospel, less perilous to the souls of men, than the practice of dancing. It has attempted to exhibit and authenticate, on the widest scale, an administration of Christianity, in which there shall be no more syllable of rebuke for crimes that shock the morals sense of Christendom. The influence of the Tract Society has tended to make the Southern churches more timid and cowed in the presence of the imperious slave-trading interest. As a consequence of this policy—partly, but not exclusively—behold the SOUTHERN APOSTACY!"

In December 1841, a report of "The "Committee of the Synod of New York and New Jersey, on the subject of the mutilations of books by the American Tract Society," was published; and in that report, the mutilations and omissions in the editions published, by that Society, of D'Aubigne's History of the Great Reformation, were pointed out—besides, there are the omissions and expurgations in other books published, as to the vile sin of Slavery, and the substitution of sentences other than the original.

The notice by me entitled, "Publications," referable to these matters, has been widely circulated, and a Canadian public are again reminded of their duty.

A HISTORY OF ALL NATIONS,

FROM THE

EARLIEST PERIODS TO THE PRESENT TIME;

UNIVERSAL HISTORY:

IN WHICH THE HISTORY OF EVERY NATION, ANCIENT AND MODERN, IS SEPARATELY GIVEN.

Illustrated by 70 Stylographic Maps and 700 Engravings

By S. G. GOODRICH,

AUTHOR OF 'PICTORIAL GEOGRAPHY OF THE WORLD,' 'PARLEY'S CABINET LIBRARY,' 'PARLEY'S TALES,' &c.

Complete in one imperial octavo volume, of more than twelve hundred pages of double column letter-press; and upwards of seven hundred elegant illustrations.

It is believed that a Universal History, suitable in form, extent, and arrangement, to the wants of the mass of American readers, has never been presented to the public. For this reason, and in compliance with numerous suggestions from those entitled to respect, the author has undertaken the formidable task of supplying one of a popular character and for general use.

A reader of history should always have in mind two things—viz., the place where, and the time when, an event happened. In the present work therefore, the greography of each country whose history is carefully given; and to aid the reader, seventy stylographic maps have been added. Careful attention, also, has been paid to Chronology, so that, at every page and every chapter, the reader may find the dates of the events which are described.

In order to avoid the confusion which inevitably arises from embracing the whole history of mankind in a general chronological view, the author has adopted an ethnographic arrangement, by which he presents each nation separately. The advantages of this plan for a popular treatise, are obvious. The mind of the reader is not overtasked by a boundless extent of view, nor bewildered by a perplexing multiplicity of objects. On the contrary, everythnig is clear and distinct. Events, instead of being forced out of their true place and connection, are presented in easy and natural succession, thus imparting to the work the attraction and interest of continuous narrative. Another advantage of the plan is, that it not merely admits, but invites descriptive details, illustrative anecdotes, personal adventures and sketches of character, all of which serve not only to give life and effect to the pages of the historian, but to impart the colors of truth and reality to the pictures he may present.

While the work thus presents a separate and distinct history, and also exhibits the present state of every nation, ancient and modern, including the recent revolutions in Europe, still, for the purpose of showing how nations have acted upon or influenced the destinies of one another, General Views are given, at suitable periods, presenting the great movement of mankind, as one family, in its onward march from the past to the present time.

It is proper to state, that while the author promises only a compilation, yet he has endeavored to choose from the highest and best authorities; and while the work is offered as a popular treatise, it still seeks to present the practical results of philosophic investigation; and finally, that while justice is rendered to the classic ages, the whole work is written in the spirit of modren civilization—which places justice above power, prefers peace to war, and regards the Christian, rather than the soldier, as the true hero of our race.

The work is illustrated with 700 engravings, designed rather for instruction than mere embellishment. Present engraved views of cities monuments, coins, medals, portraits, weapons of war, vehicles for travelling, dress, religious rites and the manners and customs of ancient and modern times.

With a view to render it more valuable, especially in the family library, an ample chronological table is given, with a full index—containing upwards of four thousand historical and geographical names;—thus rendering it a Cyclopedia of History, and Universal Gazetteer, available, for daily and familiar use, as a book of reference.

The work is in one imperial octavo volume, containing 1200 royal 8vo. pages, in double columns, and embraces as much printed matter as six or eight octavo volumes of ordinary extent.

AND IS BROUGHT DOWN TO THE YEAR 1854.

The following is a notice of it from the Boston Post:

"Of the excellence and character of the compilation we have heretofore spoken, and can, therefore, do little more at present than to repeat ourselves. Not only the philosophy of history, but geology, geography, and astronomy, are discussed, at some length, in the introductory chapters. Then comes a very interesting essay on physical and political geography, followed by a paper on the antediluvian and patriarchal ages. To this succeeds the history of Asia and Africa, from the earliest period to the present time. Then succeeds, in order, the history of Europe and America. In every respect this "Universal History" is to be commended as a useful compilation. For schools, as well as for the general reader, it must prove highly attractive. The illustrations answer every purpose, and really illustrate the text. Although called a "history," and thereby ranked by some people with many a drowsy volume, we can assure our readers that they will scarcely find a more readable book, than this under notice. The compiler is neither dull nor tedious. He does his work briefly and clearly, and, in addition to the historical facts, gives many curious anecdotes and statements regarding the manners, customs, social life, religion, government, costume, sports, amusements and employments, of the different nations of the earth. We advise people to look at the publication. It is just the thing for the general reader, being neither deep, nor verbose, nor stupid. It it a compilation made with taste and skill, as well as with patience and labor."

Without professing myself a believer in all varied departments of Phrenology, a Science to which I have given little or no attention, I yet have pleasure in acknowledging that, myself and family having submitted to an examination at the request of Mr. Persons, he gave us, and that with great readiness, as far as I can judge, a very truthful description of our characters. Conscientious defects were pointed out. Those faculties which needed cultivation, and those that had been improved and developed by particular pursuits of studies were named, in cases where he could not have known what these were

As Mr P. professes his belief in the atonement of Christ as the only ground of acceptance with God, and in the necessity of the influences of the Holy Spirit to regenerate the soul and to enable us to improve what is defective in us, and in the hope that it may be his object to become practically acquainted with these truths himself and to cause their influences to be felt in his teachings, I trust that he will meet with success in his classes.

Exhibitions and Lectures.

THE Undersigned proposes exhibiting the

Diorama of Uncle Tom's Cabin,

in the principal Cities, Towns, and Villages in the Northern States and Canada: and to accompany them with abundant evidence as to the truthfulness of the facts assumed by the author, in the work known by that name, which will include the recital of some most mysterious and thrilling incidents in the history of his own family. The flight of his parents for freedom—their capture, and return to slavery and their second flight; a history of their lost boys, who were stolen and sold into slavery—the death of one of them, and the redemption of the other by the purchase of himself; and the final purchase for the enormous sum of five thousand dollars.

The paintings, comprising the scenes of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," are the production of an eminent French artist, and show as large as life, and represent the most prominent scenes and characters in the work.

In order to render our labors more effectual and create more general interest and benefit, we propose the following arrangements, viz:—To give one half of the receipts to any Church or Society, or regularly appointed committee by the puplic, who will provide a place, secure an audience, and defray the expenses incident to the meeting.

An arrangement by which every Church or Society in the country may replenish their funds, aid their pastors, or whatever other benevolent object that commends itself to public patronage.

Let such then who would help the cause, help themselves, and help us in our feeble endeavours to enlist the public ear to the cries of bleeding humanity; go at once to work, communicate immediately with us preparatory to an exhibition.

We shall not however confine ourselves to that deplorable and humiliating aspect of the colored man's case, repesented in that work.

But we promise at no distant date, a new programme of very different scenes, representing not only an entirely original, but a far more hopeful aspect of the black man, than has ever been presented to the American public.

It is neither egotism, nor vet flattery, in us to say that this mode of giving instruction possesses the double merit of engaging those two most important faculties that man possesses—the mind and the sight at the same time, and making an ineffacable impression. It is not as being necessarily dependent and degraded, then that, we shall confine our exhibitions of his character.

There have been places where, and times when the black man of modern times has proven himself the patriot, the statesman, and the warrior. As such, then, let him be known to the world, that it may acknowledge it, and to our youth, that they may imitate their example and copy their virtues.

We suffer more perhaps, from false representation, than all other ills put together.

Poetry.

Isabel Lee.

"O! which of my lovers is thinking of me?
For my cheek's like a cherry," said Isabel Lee,
As she pressed her little white hand on her brow,
"Through whose precious heart is my name sounding now?
Is it Harold, the artist, the while he doth paint,
With a smile on his lips, the fair face of the saint
Which he said in the hours of our parting should wear
A brow like mine own and the same golden hair."
And the shadows crept up to the garden gate fast;
"I wonder, I wonder, if out on the lea
Dear Robert, the hunter, is thinking of me."
Yes, Isabel Lee, the sweet pride of the glen,
The hunter was nursing thy memory then,
For as to his lips thy sweet rose-bud was pressed
The slight stem was broken it fell on his breast.
Sweet Isabel Lee, she heard the bird sing,
And the cool water fall with a plunge in the spring
She went with a smile to the old cherry tree,
And said—"It is Alfred a thinking of me.
For when I stood here in the moonlight with him
His dark, poet-eye grew all shadowed and dim,
And his voice was the sweetest I ever have heard,
Each pulse in my bosom its echoes have stirred;
He said that he loved me, and asked me to be
His bride when the autumn mists shone o'er the lea."
Yes, Isabel Lee, the sweet pride of the glen,
The artist was nursing thy memory then;
But he looked on the face he was painting with dread,
For somehow it wore the calm look of the dead.
Sweet Isabel Lee, to the lattice she went,
And her rosy-hued cheek on her folded hands bent.
She mocked the gay thrush on the old cherry tree
With "which of my lovers is thinking of me?"
Is it Robert the hunter, afar on the moor?
This morn, ere the sunrise, he stood by my door:
He sued for a rose that was just to unfold,
And said he would deem it more precious than gold;
I have heard through the woods his old rifle ring out,
And the bay of his hounds in victorious shout:
But once since he left, and the noon is now past,
The poet was nursing thy memory then,
He was saying the dream is too sweet, it will be
Like the rose and the rain-bow, my Isabel Lee,
Thy cheek hath grown pale, pretty Isabel Lee.
But a lover unthought of was thinking of thee,
His step was unheard on the emerald moor,
His form was unseen as it stood by the door,
His kiss was not felt as it lay on thy cheek,
His troth plight unspoken as earth lovers speak.
The flowers for thy bridal are bright on the tree,
The fair snowy robe will be ready for thee;
But Harold nor Robert, beside thee shall stand,
Nor Alfred, loved Alfred, receive thy fair hand.
Oh! Isabel Lee, the sweet pride of the glen,
The bridegroom was nursing thy memory then.

THE CONTRAST.

Poor, indeed, the Slave that quivers
'Neath the lash, by task man sprung,
While exposed to cold, he shivers
O'er the toil so vilely rung.
Still laboring on, mid pain and sorrow
Prays he for release to morrow.

While the corn in scant proportion
Dealt by grudging hand, is laid
In the mortar—wild contortions
Shows how hard the bread is made.
Chains and terror check the sigh,
But the tear-drop dim the eye.

On he toils through days of sorrow
Naught to compensate his grief,
Still he prays that e're to-morrow,
God would send a kind relief.
Death would be an end to pain,
Dying—he might live again.

Thus his case has one bright feature,
When compared with him who holds
Chains that bind his fellow creature—
Valued at a price in gold.
Hopeless he, beyond a hope,
Strives with God's right arm to cope.

Poor slaveholder, what a terror
Steals athwart his anxious frame,
When he finds he's lost forever,
Plunged in darkness, guilt and shame.
Mid startling groans and bitter cries
He dies; and yet he never dies.

While with demask curtains shrouded,
Death the conquest has begun,
Friends around his bed have crowded,
But the dreadful work is done.
Groans he, not like Christian groans,
Deeper, darker, wilder tones.

Hastes he to the judgment bar,
There to hear his sentence given,
On the left in distance far
Out of reach of hope or heaven.
Hears the dreadful sentence roll
O'er his guilty trembling soul.

I was hungry, void of ease,
But my wants he would not see
As ye did it not to these
So ye did it not to me.
Down to darkness fiercely driven,
Farewell to slaves, farewell to heaven.

Another death-bed scene appears,
On couch of straw the menial slave,
And as the turbid stream he nears
He lisps, the Saviour died to save.
Farewell to toil and pain he cries,
I hail a mansion in the skies.

And as the court of heaven he nears,
The Saviour King breaks forth again,
Come in, thou heavenly guest, he hears
You've suffered long now rise to reign.
Farewell my master, now farewell,
I rise to heaven with God to dwell.

Cure for Felons.

Within the past year we have known the spinal marrow of an ox or cow applied by the different persons, with the most satisfactory results in relieving the pain and securing a speedy cure of their felons. This, we are confident, will be very useful information to many persons. The spinal marrow should be applied fresh every four hours for two days.

A New Fact in Grafting.

The better process generally for working cherries and plums, is to bud or inoculate at the proper season; but it often happens that it is desirable to work trees too old, or the season so dry that the bark will not slip, and the budding process cannot be performed, in which case grafting becomes important. The grafting of the cherry is quite an uncertain operation, and never succeeds well except when performed early in the spring, and the scions, which are difficult to keep, are in good order, the bark is so liable to discolor, and the wood to shrivel, which is absolutely fatal to its vitality. The same trouble applies to the plum in a less degree. Individuals, not nursery-men, are apt to neglect cutting their scions in proper time, and are only sensible of the oversight when they observe the objects they wish to alter at the opening of spring, when it is too late. The new process to which I allude, is a means whereby a scion of any kind may be cut from a tree after the buds are fully expanded, but not opened, and grafted the same minute, and which almost invariably succeeds, if properly executed. In this process I prefer the terminal point of a limb for the scion, or any part may be used by cutting the wood close to the upper bud, and dipping it twice, with two or three minutes' interval, into a vial containing a small quantity of collodion, or artificial cuticle, which can be procured of any apothecary. It instantly forms an air-tight coating, both flexible and elastic, and protects it from drying and losing its vitality. There is no time of the year, when the new buds are sufficiently formed and the stock in a growing state, but what grafting by this process may be performed, in which case have but one bud on the scion, and dip the whole wood, except the wedge, in the collodion, to protect it from the drying sun and heat of summer. It sometimes happens that one has a single choice exotic, difficult to procure, that it is important not to fail in grafting, and this method almost infallibly insures success.—New England Farmer.

How to Raise and Feed Fowls.

In the first place, I would recommend to all who intend breeding Fowls, whether for pleasure, convenience or profit, to procure some pure breed, of whatever variety they may fancy, and then breed them pure, and improve upon them, year after year, by selecting their finest, best-modeled pullets for breeding purposes, and by changing the cock yearly, so as to avoid breeding "in andin." By pursuing this course, fowls may be increased in size and beauty to an extent perfectly astonishing. By the opposite course, the largest varieties may be reduced to the size of the smallest bantam. Follow the same rule in breeding to the feathers. Take a pair of black bantams, with only one white feather, and select from the offspring, for breeding purposes, those which have the most white feathers, and the stock will, in a few years, be changed from black to white.

In order to breed fowls successfully, it is of the first importance that they have a suitable building, for so long as the old plan of keeping them in damp underground hovels, or in close unventilated buildings with perhaps one whole side of glass, by which means they are heated as hot as an oven through the day, just so long shall we hear of their having all manner of distempers, and that breeding poultry is unprofitable.

I here give you a plan of a building sufficiently large to accommodate from 72 to 100 fowls, which building may be varied according to circumstances. It should in all cases be entirely above ground, facing the south, if convenient leaving an aperture through which the fowls may pass in and out at their pleasure. Insert no more glass than is necessary for the admission of light.

Dimensions as follows, viz: 15 feet long, 10 feet wide; ports in front 10 feet, in back side 7 feet long; roof perfectly tight, floor also tight and smooth. The sides should be common straight-edged boards, battened over the cracks, if necessary. Roost poles of 3 by 4 joist, running the whole length of the back side of the building, with a poop in the centre of each.

For convenience in cleaning the building, I would recommend that the poles be placed on a level, three feet from the floor, and eighteen inches apart, with an inclined plane in the centre for the fowls to walk to the poles upon. Saturate the poles occasionally with whale oil and whitewash the whole interior at least twice a year; keep the floor covered with wood or coal ashes, and when the building is cleaned, (which should be often,) sprinkle a little air-slacked lime over the floor, by which means vermin of every kind will usually be kept out. Ventilate well, as fowls need air as well as man.

In order to make them grow rapidly, feed them regularly three times a day when young, never placing before them more than they will eat; change their food often, as whatever they like is good for them—wheat, oats, barley, corn. Indian meal scalded or cooked and seasoned with a little salt, is good for chickens; also, sour or curdled milk. Raw potatoes and onions chopped fine are almost indispensable. Chandlers' scraps are also good.

To make hens lay in the winter, feed them three times a day on Indian meal dough, mixed slightly with Cayenne pepper; scraps of meat three times a week; raw onions chopped once a week, the balance of the time give them corn, oats, barley, buckwheat, or any thing of the kind. Always have oyster-shells pounded fine within their reach—also, gravel and pure water.

Choosing a Horse.

There is much pleasure and profit in the service of a good horse; but very little of either in a bad one. There are many mean horses that make a good appearance when taken from the hands of a jockey. In purchasing a horse then, trust not to the seller's word; let your own judgement, or that of a friend be chiefly relied on. See that he has good fore feet and joints, and then he stands well on his legs. See that his fore teeth shut even; for many horses have the under jaw the shortest; these will grow poor at grass. See hat his hair is short and fine, for this denotes a good horse. Observe his eyes that they are clear and free from blemish; that he is not moon-eyed or white-eyed; for such are apt to start at night. A laage hazel colored eye is the best.

Look at his knees; see that the hair or skin are not broke, for this denotes a stumbler.—Take care his wind is good; for a trial of this let him be fed on good hay for twenty-four hours, take hi to water and let him drink his fill, place him with his head the lowest; if then he will breathe free the e is no danger. See that his countenance is bright and cheerful; this is an excellent mirror to discover his goodness in. If his nostrils are broad, it is a sign that he is well-winded; narrow nostrils are the contrary.

See that his spirits are good, but that he is gentle and easily governed; not inclined to start. In travelling mind he lifts his feet neither too high nor too low; that he does not overreach nor interfere, and that he carries his hind legs the widest. See that he is well ribbed back, and not high boned. The size may be determined by the purchaser. Age from five to ten is the best. There are many tricks practised by jockeys to make horses appear young; all I would say is, that horses' teeth, when young, are wide, white and even; the insides of their mouths are fleshy, and their lips hard and firm. On the contrary, the mouth of an old horse is lean above and below; the lips are soft and ersily turned up; their teeth grow longer, narrower and of a yellow color,—Cole's American Veterinarian.

Miscellaneous.

Commandments to California Wives.

We have been shown a series of ten commandments, drawn up for California wives, which occupy one page of a letter sheet, sent from El Dorado. Some of them would answer for this region quite as well as California, and we therefore copy:

Thou shalt not "put on airs" of self-importance, nor indulge in day dreams of extravagance, nor allow thy vanity and love of dress to turn thy head, and unfit thee for the sober duties of life, or make thee merely an expensive toy and walking advertisement of the latest fashions.

Thou shalt not consider it fashionable, cleanly, or economical, to sweep the street with $100 dresses—when at home thou considered thyself fortunate to get calico—nor to promenade muddy sidewalks in long satin robes and bedraggled underclothes; nor to wear jewels or flowers on thy head while thy feet go "flipety click" in buskin shoes run down at the heel, and discover to strangers the holes in thy stockings.

Thou shalt not starve thyself and family 29 days out of 30 to feast thy circle and give a party: nor by the purchase of expensive gew-gaws and finery keep thyself and husband poor; nor run up bills for frills and farbeloes, while the dry goods merchants and thy husband are at their wit's end how to pay their way, nor spend hard earnings foolishly, nor loose a half day shopping, to invest four bits. Neither shalt thou devour all thy savings at cotillion parties and balls: nor waste thy substance by improvidence and neglect.

Thou shalt not substitute sour looks for thy pickles; nor a fiery temper for stovewood: nor cross words for kindlings: nor trifling talk for light bread: nor tart language for desert: nor excuses for anything. Neither shalt thou serve up cold looks or cold meals for breakfast; nor scoldings and hard potatoes for dinner: nor what remains of the other two meals for supper— no, not even washing days. Neither, shalt thou allow hard feelings or unwashed dishes to accumulate: nor withhold either secrets of shirt buttons from the bosom of thy husband, and never omit little kindnesses of any kind.

Thou shalt not neglect to make thy person and thy home attractive—that when thy husband cometh from his daily toil, or business care, thy cheering looks of loving welcome may greet his footsteps at the cottage door, and charm him into forgetfulness of all but thee. And should he be unfortunate—as many are—thou shalt not increase his sorrows—as many do— by weeping and repining: but with all thy noblest sympathy and womanly love, seek to lift the heavy burthen from his manly heart: and thus renewed, again to dare the rugged and slippery steep that leads to fortune and success—believing "there's no such word as fail," while thou art near to cheer him on and share with him the victory.—Kentucky News.

Mustaches.

The newspapers have discovered that men of money—rich men—never wear mustaches. This settles the question. Mustaches are doomed. They must become unfashionable. People, if they are not rich themselves, it is said, always like to do as "rich men" are wont to do. Let every mustache be shaved forthwith.

☞ If one should cause a continual shower of water to fall upon a flowering tree for the purpose of washing off the parasites which infest and injure the blossoms, would not the result of such a measure in all likelihood be that blossoms as well as parasites, the needful as well as the injurious would be destroyed? So it is with education if too many rules are laid down, and too many restrictions placed about the daily walks of life.

A Warning to Young Wives.

A case of suicide, love and jealously has recently occurred at New Orleans, which has fed the somewhat jaded appetites of excitement mongers. The victim is a young Irishman named Mee, who had acted some months past as steward of the steamship Orizaba. About six months ago he married a young and beautiful woman, whom he loved to distraction, and whom he believed loved him in return with equal ardor—so indeed it is supposed she did. There was nothing to show that it was otherwise; but young Mee was fond of society, and among his companions was one who, like himself, possessed a young and handsome wife; and this young lady, Mrs. Mee, thought, or fancied, paid too much attention to her husband; still there is nothing to show that Mee entertained for her any other feeling than that of friendship and admiration. On Sunday evening last, however, he returned home to his residence in Camp street, and soon perceived from the lowering countenance of his young wife and other symptoms that a domestic tempest was lowering. Whether he had or had not been guilty of too ardent admiration of his friend's wife, he could not endure the suspicions of his own wife. Fearful the gathering storm would burst, and believing that the demon of jealousy once aroused, his future peace of mind was shipwrecked, he left the house without saying any thing to the jealous woman, and straightway walked to a drug store in Charles street, where he had been in the habit of purchasing drugs for the use of the steamer. Here he bought a pint of laudanum, and immediately on receiving it, snatched a tumbler from the stand, emptied the laudanum therein, and drank every drop. The druggist saw him in the act, and exclaimed,—"You have swollowed that laudanum!" "What if I have?" exclaimed the desperate man; "it's my own business." He then hastened to a coffee house near by and swallowed a tumbler full of brandy, and of course soon became insensible. The druggist had followed him, and he was taken back to the store, and powerful antidotes administered, but the dose of poison had been too powerful, no result ensued, and he shortly afterward died. He was taken home, and the scene that ensued when his wife heard the fearful tidings baffles description.

She frantically kissed her dead husband's lips, and accused herself as his murderer, and for some time fears were entertained for her sanity. A coroner's jury was called, an investigation took place, a suitable verdict rendered, and the body of the suicide was consigned to earth, and thus ended one of the most tragic dramas of real life ever known or heard of.

General Washington on Slavery.

George Washington, the father of his country, in a letter to La Fayette, written in 1798, the year before his death, says of the institution of slavery as follows:—

"I agree with you cordially in your views in regard to Negro Salvery. I have long considered it a most serious evil, both socially and politically, and I should rejoice in any feasable scheme to rid the States of such a burden. The congress of 1787 adopted an ordinance which prohibits the existence of unvoluntary servitude in our North-western Territory. I consider it a wise measure; and though it was introduced by a gentleman from New England, it met the approval of nearly all the members from the States more immediately interested in slave labor. The prevailing opinion in Virginia is against the spread of slavery into our new country, and I trust that we shall ultimately have a comfederacy of free States. I would, at any time, gladly relinquish the right of property in my own slaves, if a judicious system of emancipation could be devised."

James Madison, in the convention which formed the Constitution of the United States, objected to the word "Slave" being used in the clause which was inserted for rendition of fugitives. His objections were agreed to by the convention and the milder term of "persons owning service or labor," applicable alike to white apprentices and black slaves, was put in our Constitution. Mr. Madison said on that occasion:—

"I object to the word 'Slave' appearing in a Constitution which, I trust, is to be the charter of freedom to unborn millions; nor would I willingly perpetuate the memory of that fact that slavery ever existed in our country. It is a great evil and under the providence of God I look forward to some scheme of emancipation which shall free us from it. Do not therefore let us appear as if we regarded it perpetual, by using in our free constitution an odious word opposed to every sentiment of liberty."

Henry Ward Beecher on Creeds.

The Christian Inquirer says: "We know not where to find a better protest against the abuse referred to, than the following, which we copy from an exchange paper:"

There is nothing imaginary in the statement that the creed power is beginning to prohibit the Bible as really as Rome did, though in a subtler way. During the whole course of seven years' study, the Protestant candidate for the ministry sees before him an unauthorized statement, spiked down and stereotyped, of what he must find in the Bible, or be martyred. And does any one acquainted with human nature need to be told that he studies under a tremendous pressure of motive? Is that freedom of opinion—the liberty wherewith Christ maketh free? Rome would have given that. Every one of her clergy might have studied the Bible to find the Pontifical creed, on the pain of death. Was that liberty? Hence, I say, that liberty of opinion in our theological seminaries is a mere form, to say nothing of the thumb screw of criticism, by which every original mind is tortured into negative propriety. The whole boasted liberty of the student consists in a choice of chains—a choice of handcuffs—whether he will wear the Presbyterian handcuffs, Baptist, Methodist, Episcopal, or other evangelical handcuffs. Hence it has now come to pass that the ministry themselves dare not study the Bible. Large portions thereof are seldom touched. It lies useless lumber; or, if they do study and search, they do not show their people what they find there. There is something criminal in saying any thing new. It is shocking to utter words that have not the mould of age upon them.

From the Independent.

An Incident and its Lessons.

A few evenings since at dusk, as a father of a family just returned home from work was standing at his well-side, a young, bright looking mulatto approached and asked him a question concerning the way. His suspicions were at once excited that he was speaking with a fugitive from slavery, and after having, by kindness and assurance of friendly designs, won his confidence, he drew from him the admission that his suspicions were just.

A little knot were soon gathered round the fleeing stranger, and the particulars of his story were gathered from him. He was three-quarters white, and was the nephew of the man to whom, invenerable phrase, he had "owed service."

His situation had been one of great ease. He had never known by personal experience what slavery is. His uncle had been kind to him, and given him an education so that he could boast some small reading in Latin and Greek, and something more than a smattering of German, and he had been for years his book-keeper, and filled the place of a gentleman rather than a slave. At his death which occurred some weeks since, his master had willed him his freedom, and left him several thousand dollars, the rest of his estate going to his cousin "Charley," as he called his master's son. This son had been dissipated in his habits—as some sons of slave-holders are—and had become largely indebted to a lawyer in the vicinity. It was desired by both of them to devise some means to prevent the large legacy bequeathed the nephew from being paid him. The cousin did not manifest any ill-will to his quarter-colored relative, but the lawyer in whose power he was, urged him to make the man over to him, and he would see his claim disposed of. Having overheard this conversation, and being advised by others that he was in danger, he had judged it most prudent to escape, and accordingly left before his uncle's burial had taken place. How he escaped it is not deemed best to publish.

The young fugitive was questioned minutely for two or three hours by the interested group around him. He evinced a remarkable knowledge of Northern politics, which he had acquired by reading the newspapers to his master. No one in the company felt himself a match for him in this branch of knowledge. He also exhibited great shrewdness and caution in his mode of procedure, giving his confidence very slowly, and watching against any surprise. His religious sentiments were infidel. Of these he hoped to rid himself after becoming familiar with a Christianity which does not apologise for slavery. He was familiar with Uncle Tom's Cabin, and pronounced it a true delineation of slavery.

Having heard the fugitive's tale, and taken up a collection to aid him, the company provided a buggy, and aided and comforted him some miles on his way, directing him to a good station house on the railroad he was now temporarily patronizing.

This incident has its lessons.

"It illustrates the powerful tendency now prevailing at the South to legislate and interpret law against freedom. This man had his freedom willed him, but yet was in imminent danger of being sold into slavery, and that within the ancient limits of the District of Columbia.

2. It shows that the inexorable law of slavery relents not before accomplishments, intelligence, and near family ties. The neighbors and acquaintances of this fugitive feared that his own cousin, little, if any, above him in cultivation and intelligence, and influenced merely by selfish considerations would give him up to a base minion of the law, to be sold as a chattel personal.

3. It shows that the fugitive slave law is against all the instincts of nature. Slaveholders in a slave state urged this man to make his escape and doubtless rejoiced in it. How disappointed would even they have felt, had his first lurking place been discovered, and he been brought back! They need not wonder it is hard to execute it in our latitude.—Congregationalist.

A Valuable Invention by a Colored Man.

The Philadelphia Sun says Aaron Roberts, a colored man in that city, has invented a most valuable aid to the Fire Department. It is constructed on the principle of a telescope, occupying a very small space when closed, but capable of being extended to a height of some sixty feet, by means of concealed cogs. Above this is a branch pipe, made flexible, and worked in any direction by chains reaching to the ground. The machine can be run into a narrow alley, or any confined space, and, by attaching a hose to a fire-plug, the water will be forced to the top, and thence directed at the pleasure of the operator. Complete safety is thus afforded the firemen, and instant application may be made to any part of a burning building.

From the London Anti-Slavery Advocate.

Who is Responsible for the Existence of Slavery in America?

The existence in any country of such a system of iniquity as American slavery, sustained by law and sanctified by religion, should be a sufficient ground for repudiating the government and religion of that country, by all who revere God or regard man.

Slavery does not merely rob man of money; it robs God of man. Slavery does not merely kidnap man's child: it kidnaps from God his child. Slavery invades God's great family, kidnaps large numbers of its members, and at once annihilates all their relations to God, all their claims to be regarded as of his family, and yokes them with the beasts of the field, physically, intellectually, socially, morally, and religiously.

The steam-engine is fed with wood, the horse with hay, the slave with hominy, and all for the same object—to create the power of action. How to obtain the most work at the least expense is ever a serious problem with all who employ these various machines. In some parts of the United States, coal is best and cheapest for the steam-engine, in others, wood. One class of farmers prefer a small, hardy breed of horses, because they are kept at less expense, though capable of less work. Others think the loss of dearer feeding is more than made up by the larger amount of work, and so they prefer the superior breed of horses.

On the same principle are the feeding and treatment of slaves calculated. A few years ago, the question of whether slaves were more profitable, when well fed and cared for, or the reverse, was gravely discussed, both in public and private. Some contended that hard driving and low feeding were profitable, even though involving the early loss of 'the stock,' and the necessity of purchasing or raising 'new gangs.' Others held that more careful management, so as to prolong life, was better, even though it incurred the risk of sometimes having old slaves to support, when past labor. This question is still debated.

In some places, cotton-seed has been mixed with corn to feed the slaves. In Georgia it was found by experiment, that one-fourth cotton-seed did not seriously affect the condition of 'the stock.' Then one-half cotton-seed was tried; still the slaves could labor. But a trial of three-fourths cotton-seed proved fatal. It is thus that steam engines, horses, and slaves are held and treated as machinery. Should any one discover a way to propel the steam-engine by electricity, at a fourth or a tenth part the expense of wood or coal, he will take his place in history by the side of Watt and Fulton. But how much more worthy of eminence would he be thought by slaveholders, could he invent some mode of keeping their animated machinery in good and permanent working condition, by galvanism, without the aid of corn or cotton-seed! Such discoveries as these would bring the golden age to steam-boat and rail-road companies. No more fuel would be bought; neither would slaveholders spend any more money in feeding slaves. Intellectually and socially, as well as physically, the slave and the horse are placed on the same level. In America, we 'break the colts,' and 'handy the steers.' The meaning is, we teach them to work. This is absolutely needful. The animals are useless till this is done. It is exactly so with the slaves. Whatever is necessary for the owners' interest is taught them, and nothing more. Oxen cannot learn to read, slaves need not. So no pains are taken to teach either.

Socially, the rule is the same. The lamb is sold from the sheep, the calf from the cow, and the slave babe from the mother, at the pleasure or caprice of the owner. In neither case is sire or dam, father or mother, consulted. Cattle cannot make a marriage contract—slaves must not. And so they are alike herded and housed together.

In morals and religion, no higher rule or law is observed. The will of the owner is the supreme law. The horse is scourged, and so is the slave; and for the same reason, to enforce obedience. True, the slave is told of a future retribution; but heaven and hell are set before him merely as the consequences of obedience or disobedience to his master. I have in my possession many sermons, as well as some catechisms for slaves, by most eminent southern divines; and I only make this fearful statement, after having read these productions carefully. Nobody doubts that these motives would also be urged upon the intractable horse or ox, were he, like the slave, capable of being influenced by them. If the poor brutes could be moved like the slave by such a threat, then would the dread of future fire and brimstone be superadded to the lash and goadstick.

Thus it is clear, that neither physically, intellectually, socially, morally, nor religiously, is the slave esteemed above the beasts that perish. So terribly does slavery hurl its victims from their high estate among the morning stars, from their native home, not in Africa, but among the sons of God.

What outrage, what sacrilege can compare with this? Immortal man, doomed to live and die the life and death of a dog! Reverse the order, and it would not be so impious. Lift the dog to a level with man, Carry him through every form of human experience, and of the ordinances of the church. When he dies, sing over him a solemn requiem, and toll the funeral knell. Say that you hope he is now before the throne, crowned with immortal honors, decked with eternal glory. Do all this, and, shocking as it seems, it would be innocence itself, compared with the outrages inflicted on the best-used slave.

All these mockeries have not harmed the dog. It may be most daring, insulting impiety and blasphemy towards God, to attempt to lift a brute to the level of immortal man—even to thrust him upwards to the heavenly abode itself, to companionship with angels and sanctified spirits. But how much more awful is the act when man is torn from his high estate; his fellowship with the Father, his kindred with all divine existences, and hurled down to a level with the brutes!—man made in the image of God, and touched with his immortal fire; destined to an unending existence, and capable of development and expansion, until the meanest slave who toils to-day shall exceed all that Gabriel has yet attained; and will even then but have entered upon the ever-growing greatness and glory which are still before him! The puny attempt to exalt a brute beast to an immortal level cannot compare with the iniquity of sacrilegiously plunging God's own image and brightness down among the meanest of his works.

And yet this is to-day the condition of nearly four millions of men, women, and children in the United States. Other myriads have fulfilled their dreary doom, and have disappeared from the earth: and who can tell how many millions more may yet be born, and die in the depths of the same degradation?

For all this, some one is responsible; and the account must be fearful, to whomsoever the crime is attributed. No other mortal sin can compare with it. Ages ago, nations were swept away with the besom of distruction, for crimes not half so tremendous.

In my next, I will endeavor to show where stand all the great religious bodies of America on this subject, as well as the most eminent divines, individually and personally. This may help us to an answer to our question. It is high time the truth should be known—truth which may be tried in the fire of the strictest enquiry.

The Release of Passmore Williamson.

After spending some three months in prison for no other offence than that of having told the truth, and adhering to it like a man, Passmore Williamson is now released. It will be seen from the proceedings in Court, copied below, that he has simply repeated, in another form, the very statement which led to his imprisonment, and Judge Kane seizes upon this repetition to escape from his odious position.

On Saturday morning, Passmore Williamson appeared in the United States District Court, at Philadelphia, accompanied by his council, Mess s. Meredith, Gilpin, and Hopper, and offered the following petition:

The petition of Passmore Williamson respectfully showeth:

That he desires to purge himself of the contempt because of which he is now attached, and to that end is willing to make true answers to such interrogatories as may be addressed to him by the Court, touching the matter heretofore inquired of by the writ of habeas corpus, to him directed at the relation of John H. Wheeler.

Wherefore he prays that he may be permitted to purge himself of said contempt by making true answers to such interrogatories as may be addressed to him by the Hon. Court touching the premises.

P. WILLIAMSON.

Judge Kane, after consideration, replied to the petitioner as follows:—

'Passmore Williamson—The Court have received your petition, and, upon consideration thereof, having thought right to grant the prayer thereof. You will therefore make here, in open Court, your solemn affirmation, that in the return heretofore made by you to the writ of habeas corpus which issued from this Court at the relation of John H. Wheeler, and in the proceedings consequent thereupon, you have not intended a contempt of this Court or of its process: Moreover, that you are now willing to make true answers to such interrogatories as may be addressed to you by the Court, touching the premises inquired of in the said writ of habeas corpus.'

The required affirmation was then made in the form dictated by the Judge.

Mr. Vandyke, the District Attorney, then submitted an interrogatory in writing, which was not read aloud at that time.

Mr. Gilpin said Mr. Williamson was perfectly willing to answer the interrogatory submitted by the District Attorney, but as he did not know what other interrogatories might follow this, he thought it best that it and its answer should be filed.

Mr. Vandyke said he was willing either to file the interrogatory, or to submit it for an immediate reply.

Mr. Gilpin and Judge Kane both remarked that they had understood the District Attorney to intimate that if the question propounded was answered in the affirmative, he would be satisfied. The Court further said that it was for the petitioner to make his election, whether or not the interrogatories and the replies should be filed.

After consultation with his counsel, the petitioner preferred that the questions and answers should be filed.

The Court directed that the interrogatories should be filed. This was done, and the parties retired for a time.

Mr. Gilpin then read the interrogatory that had been propounded, and the reply of Mr. Williamson.

The defendant and his counsel then retired, and after some time returned.

The interrogatory was as follows:

Interrogatory. Did you, at the time of the service of the writ of habeas corpus at the relation af John H. Wheeler, or any time during the period intervening between the service of said writ and the making of your return thereto, seek to obey the mandate of said writ, by bringing before this honourable Court the persons of the slaves therein mentioned?

If to this interrogatory you answer in the affirmative, state fully and particularly the mode in which you sought so to obey said writ, and all that you did tending to that end.

And, therefore, it is ordered that the defendant, Passmore Williamson, do make true answers to said interrogatories.

The reply made was as follows. The reader will, however, understand that this reply was amended at the suggestion of the Court, to conform better to the views of the District Attorney. The following is the reply, as amended:

Answer of Defendant. I did not seek to obtain the writ by producing the persons therein mentioned before the Court, because I had not at the time of the service of the writ, the power over, the custody or control of them, and therefore it was impossible for me to do so. I first heard of the writ of habeas corpus on Friday, July 20, between one and two o'clock, a.m., on my return from Harrisburg. After breakfast, about nine o'clock, I went from my house to Mr. Hopper's office, when and where the return was prepared.

At ten o'clock, I came into Court as commanded by the writ. I sought to obey the writ by answering it truly; the parties not being in my possession or control, it was impossible for me to obey the writ by producing them. Since the service of the writ, I have not had the custody, possession or power over them; nor have I known where they were, except from common rumor of the newspaper reports in regard to their public appearance in the city or elsewhere.

Some discussion arose between the District Attorney and the counsel of Mr. Williamson. Mr. Vandyke contended that the reply of the defendant was evasive and contradictory. The Judge said the difficulty, he thought, could be easily overcome by amending the answer, and at the suggestion of the Court, it was amended in the following manner:

I did not seek to obey the writ by producing the persons in the writ mentioned before this Court.

I did not so seek, because I verily believed that it was entirely impossible for me to produce the said persons, agreeably to the command of the Court.

This answer was then accepted by the Court and ordered filed.

Mr. Vandyke then submitted another interrogatory, the substance of which was, whether or not Mr. Williamson had been guilty of mental reservations in his reply to the first interrogatory?

The Court overruled this interrogatory as superfluous and improper.

Mr. Vandyke withdrew this interrogatory, and offered another, which was also overruled by the Court, on the ground that it led to such replies as had already been objected to by the District Attorney.

Mr. Vandyke also withdrew this question.

Judge Kane then remarked that the District Attorney had been invited to aid the Court in this case, but that he would bear in mind that his relation to Mr. Wheeler was not suspended. This was only an inquiry as to what injury had been done the process of the Court.

Mr. Vandyke said he was aware of the position he occupied.

Judge Kane then said, 'The contempt is now regarded as purged, and the party is released from custody. He is now reinstated to the position he occupied before the contempt was committed. Mr. Williamson is now before me on the return to the writ.'

Mr. Vandyke, the District Attorney, then addressed the Court, stating that Mr. Wheeler, the owner of the slaves, had taken no part in the proceedings in relation to Passmore Williamson and the writ of habeas corpus, and leaving it to the Government to obtain atonement for the offence against the sovereign majesty of the laws.

The Bulletin, from which we abridge the above, remarks as follows, in regard to the appearance of Mr. Williamson:

'Mr. W. lookes exceedingly well, and but little paler and thinner than in July, when he made his famous return to the writ, out of which so much trouble and discussion have arisen. He appeared perfectly cool and collected throughout the proceedings this morning, and evinced no emotion whatever.'

Action against Judge Kane.

An action has been instituted against Judge Kane by Passmore Williamson, for false imprisonment. The writ was served upon the judge in Delaware county, where he will of course be tried.

From the Charleston Mercury.

Unconstitutionality of the Fugitive Slave Law Acknowledged.

Of the action of Massachusetts in abrogation of the Fugitive Slave law we have no complaint to make. It was from the first a miserable illusion; and worse, in fact, for it was an infringement upon one of the most cherished principles of the Constitution which provides that fugitives from labour, "upon demand, shall be delivered up," but gives no power to Congress to act in this affair. The tenth amendment to the Constitution provides that "the powers not delegated to the United States are reserved to the States or to the people." The clause above confers no power, but is the naked declaration of a right, and the power, not being conferred, results to the States as one of the incidents of sovereignty too dear to be trusted to the General Government. Our Southern members strove for the passage of the law, and strove honestly; but it shows the evils of our unfortunate condition, that, in the urgency of our contest with an aggressive adversary, we lose the landmarks of principle—to obtain an illusive triumph, we pressed the Government to assume a power not conferred by the instrument of its creation. and to establish a precedent by which, in all after time, it will be authorized to assume whatever right may have no constitutional organ of enforcement; and wearied with so many efforts to confine the Government to the limits of its legitimate powers, we are pleased to have assistance from another quarter, and if the question shall be determined in her favour, we will sincerely rejoice in such a vindication of the Constitution.

Patent Democracy.

According to a fair estimate, there are not more than fifty slaveholders in Kansas. And all the power of the administration party has been exerted to promote the interests of fifty men—not one of whom is as good or as worthy as the poor slave he whips! This is modern Democracy! This is caring for the interests of the people! This is 'popular sovereignty'! In order to advance the interests of fifty mean and hard-hearted wretches, a solemn national compact was violated, law was trampled upon, the feelings of the people were outraged, our country was disgraced, an honest man was removed from office for doing duty, and irresponsible slave—a fool and a coward—was appointed to a station requiring both sagacity and courage, an assemblage of cut-throats permitted to pass laws for civilized people, and troops have been sent into Kansas to enforce their laws! And still the Democratic party claims to be the ally of freedom, and a hireling press cants about 'popular sovreignty' in Kansas! And still men who assisted to bring these evils upon us ask freemen to vote for them!—Cleveland Leader.

Rumored Negro Insurrection.

BATON ROUGE, Oct, 17, 1855.

Last night, our usually quiet city was thrown into a state of great excitement by current rumors of an intended rising of the negroes in this place, and of the plantations in this vicinity.

Anonymous letters were received by the editors of the Advocate, and by the Mayor, purporting to give information of a well-organized plan by the negroes to assemble during the night, take possession of the United States Arsenal and the Branch Bank, and being thus provided with money and material, to commence a campaign against the white population. The report spread like wild-fire, and our citizens turned out in large numbers, armed to the teeth, and the streets and the suburbs were patrolled all night.

Nothing transpired, however, to confirm the rumor. This morning, a negro barber named Joe Craig was arrested, and was ordered by the Mayor to leave the place immediately. He was President of a negro association here, and circumstances caused him to be looked upon with strong suspicion. It is said that he was driven from Montgomery, Alabama, for tampering with slaves.

Yours, G.

Massasoit Guards.

Robert Morris, the commander of this company of colored young men of Boston, in communication to the Telegraph, gives the following extract from the letter of the Governor, in which that functionary, under instructions from the Attorney-General refused to furnish the company with a stand of State arms:

"As a lawyer, the reasons assigned by the Attorney-General for declining to accede to your request must, I think be convincing, though it certainly seems as if the farmers of our Federal laws were too unmindful of the bravery with which the colored citizens, side by side with their white brethern, poured out their blood in the battles that initiated, prolonged and concluded, on land and sea, the struggle which secured our independent existence as a nation."

The company now proposes to raise by subscription the means to purchase arms and equipments. Mr. Morris says it is not founded on caste; its ranks are open to all citizens of good moral character, who may wish to enroll their names among its members. Despising as we do, the entire military system, and believing it to be a curse to the city, we regret that the colored young men of Boston are ambitious to become soldiers; but we respect the manly firmness with which they assert their inalienable rights in this particular.

Murder of a Negro by Rowdies.—Flight and Escape of the Murderers.

An infamous outrage perpetrated by a gang of rowdy butchers on last Wednesday, came to light yesterday afternoon. It appears that a colored man named Charles Cole was passing up Mott street on the afternoon of the day in question, and when opposite the slaughter-house of one Shannon, between Spring and Prince streets, a man came out with a bullock's heart in his hand, and, pretending to be drunk, struck the negro in the face with it. The latter made some retaliation, and soon three other fellows rushed out of the slaughter-house and set upon him, knocking him down and kicking and beating him in the most shameful manner in the face and left side. At length the unfortunate man escaped from them, and with much difficulty reached his home, No. 177 Mott st. He was placed in bed and a physician was procured, who attended to him until Monday evening, when he died, after having endured excruciating pain from the time he received the brutal beating.

Coroner Hinton hearing of the circumstances, proceeded yesterday to hold an inquest upon the body, but found it extremely difficult to procure evidence. He caused the arrest of two men who are employed in the slaughter-house, on suspicion of their having been concerned in the outrage, but no positive testimony against them has been elicited. Dr. Finnel made a post-mortem examination of the body, and found a large tumor filling up one of the cavities of the left lung, beside which most of the internal organs were displaced and forced into the abdomen, and this was the cause of the intense pain suffered by the deceased. The inquisition will be resumed to-day. The deceased was a quiet and industrious man. He was a waiter in the Collamore House, and a native of Burlington, N. J., and thirty-six years of age. He leaves a wife to mourn his loss.—N. Y. Tribune, Oct. 31.

Amalgamation.

The imperfection of human nature is seen in nothing more clearly than in the unnatural prejudices which exist among the several nations of the earth.

There is nothing about which they are more sensitive than the subject of amalgamation. There is nothing that excites their unmitigated wrath more than the permanent union of their kith and kin with one, whom they regard as an inferior. We say permanent union, because, an illigitimate one does not effect them in the same way. To illustrate the fact. In Southern society of the American Union, colored females are forced into such an union publicly, by white men; and white females of the highest standing form such unions with colored men secretly, to escape the family's indignation and the odium of public opinion. In the Northern portion of the same country, there is but little difference, in the case, except in the morality of it. We remember, some eight years since, that nearly every member of a rich and distinguished family came well nigh dying, from the anguish produced by the elopement with and marriage of a young lady, a relative, and heiress, to an Irishman, who was the family's coachman. This single case indicates the fact generally there. The inhabitants of our country are by no means free from the like imperfection. It pervades the bosom of every class among us. The descendants of Shem, Ham, and Japhet, in Canada, are alike possessed with an unnatural prejudice, on account of national distinctions, and are equally horrified at the idea of amalgamation! Doubtless such is common to some extent to all nations, but it is awful indeed, to see it increase with what is called civilization and the spread of christianity. Is it not apparently true, that those, who are the most devoted religionists, give it the greatest power? indeed, it would seem, as though it had become a cardinal feature in their religious creed. We need not say, that such piety must be spurious, since it produces what is positively un-natural; and piety against nature, is NO PIETY!

Amalgamation is proper, and its results most happy. It is a part of the divine arrangement, and hence the different nations should practice it. It is the blending of the beauties of nature. It is the imparting of force and dignity to man and beast. It adds to those, who practice it, those varieties which may be regarded as the spice of life.

Happy will be the world, the day its principles shall be general! It will annihilate unbecoming distinctions. It will bring a word-wide peace, and war will be known no more. It will take the slave from among the beast, and put him among men—despotism will be done, and the world will be free! The feelings produced by amalgamation, must bring about such results. Such has been the tendency whenever and wherever practised. Why do the whites of Southern States of America love the mulattos more than the blacks? and the blacks more than whites of the Northern States do the colored people generally? Happy will it be for Europe, when her nations learn this lesson, and for the slave, when the tendency of Southern society to amalgamate becomes perfect! The hope of the world is in the amalgamation of nations, for the Gospel of Christ is in the doctrine of ONE BLOOD!

☞ The Thames River, in consequence of the recent rains, has rose several feet, causing the wharves to be completely inundated. Large quantities of floating timber is coming down, so much so, as to obstruct the passage of vessels at the Draw Bridge Men are kept employed in removing the timbor from the butments, in order to prevent damage.

☞ A Festival was held on the 15th inst., in the Rev. H. J. Young's Chapel. It was a brilliant affair, and much credit is due the Ladies, for the manner in which it was got up. It was quite largely attended, considering the inclemency of the weather, and everything passed off in a most agreeable manner. The proceeds are to be given for benevolent purposes.

☞ We call the attention of our readers to the advertisement, 'CHEAP CASH STORE!' in this day's issue, of Mr. Francis Martin, where he offers for sale a large and varied assortment of Dry Goods; Men's, Women's, and Children's Boots, Shoes, and Rubbers; Teas, Coffees, Sugars, and other Groceries, of superior quality, at moderate prices—his terms being strictly cash, and one price! Persons wishing to purchase, will find it to their advantage to call at his store, next door to the Post Office, and examine his Stock, before purchasing elsewhere. His motto is—"Quick sales, and small profits."

We take the following from the Colonist. As much as war is to be depricated, still it is to be preferred to slavery, and especially such as American slavery. While we should regret a war between England and the United States for many very important reasons,—yet we shall rejoice, as a people at such an one—not at the bad consequences of it, but its happy results. We shall regard it, should it come, as an answer to prayer, which God shall be pleased to give to his long and deeply afflicted people in the house of bondage in the American Union.

May the colored people both of Canada and the United States, not only mark these warlike movements, but begin in time to prepare to return to the South of North America, and do their duty to the Master and Slave!

From the Colonist

War Rumours.

We have been aware for some days past of the existence of a misunderstanding between the British Government and that of the United States, but have preserved a silence on the subject, fearing that the publicity of the facts would augment the difficulty of an amicable adjustment. For this delicacy there is now no longer an occasion; we, therefore, place before our readers from various sources, extracts calculated to afford a view of the merits of the question, and the countrs some idea of the feeling, with which the probability of a rupture between the two governments is regarded by the British public in some of the leading journals of England. The Morning Post says that, disagreeable as is the aspect of the question recently raised between the United States and England, France and Spain, with respect to Hayti and Cuba, another cause of misunderstanding has also occurred between the United States and England of infinitely more gravity and importance." The Post then refers to the complication arising from the alleged acts committed by Mr. Crampton, Sir E. Head, and Sir Gaspard le Marchant, in violation of the Municipal law of the United States as regards foreign enlistment.

The Post says, the English instructions as to enlistments were framed most carefully and scrupulously, to avoid any violation of the law; and the sensitiveness of the American Government on this particular point appears very remarkable, when their repeated and flagrant violations of public law in Texas, Mexico, and Cuba are borne in mind.

As regards Hayti and Cuba, the Post is inclined to think that Uncle Jonathan, with all his bluster, is far too wise seriously to embroil himself with the greatest maritime powers in the world merely to bolster up a really unpopular and failing Administration, whose wish is to pander to the most vicious elements in the American character. England and France have the means and the determination to repress the American spirit of lawless aggression, and though the insulting and menacing tone of the Washington Cabinet, may be accounted for by the probable acquisition of the Russian North American Territories a great maratime war is a course of policy from which the Post would fain hope the good sense of the reflecting and honest portion of the American people will save their country. What good results could spring from such an unholy contest? The commerce of England and France might be temporarily cut up, but every American ship would be swept from the seas, or the ports of America would be blockaded; the whole seaboard of America from Maine to Florida would be exposed to attack; and all this is to be encountered for the acquisition of a Haytien Sebastopol, from which Cuba can be more conveniently threatened.

The Post concludes the leader and its remarks on the enlistment questionable by trusting that the presence of the formidable British fleet which is remaining at Bermuda will tend to cool the arrogance and oversensitiveness of the American Government.

The London Times, in alluding to the large naval force assembled at the West India Station, says:—

We point attention to a singular phenomenon in our naval intelligence; we allude to the remarkable number of ships just sent out to our North American and West India Stations—a truly strange and surely ominous conjunction of British ships of war, upon a friendly coast. Let our readers study the following list, and judge whether they are not inclined, with us, to ask:

"What want they in the West.
When they should serve their Sovereign in the East."

The Pembroke, 60 screw ship, for Bermuda
The Cornwallis, 60, screw-ship, for Bermuda.
The Russell, 60, screw-ship, } To reinforce North
The Hawke, 60, screw-ship, } American and West
The Hastings, 60, sbrew-ship, } India Stations.
The Powerful, 81, sailing ship, for Jamaica.
The Rosamond, 6, paddle sloop, for North American Station.

What does this portend? If we were at war with the United States, we should hardly have a stronger fleet out there.

In reference to the augmentation of the squadron on the West Indian and North American stations, the Hampshire Telegraph states:—

"It is rumored that this movement is in consequence of the American Government having replied to some communications made to them by the Brititish Government on the subject of Cuba in a tone insulting to this country in the highest possible degree. The American Government bids the English Government to beware what they are about; tells them that England has its hands full already, and that, in defiance of England's interference with them, they will do as they please as to Cuba."

The Times, in an article transferred to the columns of the Colonist, on Friday last, states that "the English Government is omitting no opportunity of reinforcing the West India squadron, and thus interposing a powerful fleet between this country and the North American continent."

We entreat the American public to believe, notwithstanding the assertions to the contrary with which they are so assidiously plied, that there is no party or body of men in this country that regards them with any other feeling than that of the utmost goodwill, or would wish for them any other fate than the enjoyment of the utmost public freedom which is consistent with the utmost private liberty and security. We have neither the wish nor the right to intrude our opinion on that form of government which has been established in the United States; but we have, and we claim the right, to take every reasonable precaution against that spirit of unbridled license which the present Government of the United States seems inclined to tolerate. At this moment North America is in profound peace with the whole world; yet it is not the less true that in her ports are fitting out at this moment piratical filibustering expeditions, destined to carry war and bloodshed into the dominions of an unoffending neighbour."

We are compelled from want of space to reserve our own comments upon this momentous crisis;—important and momentous to Canadian interests, beyond perhaps all other sublunary considerations—big with the fate, it may be, of a lengthened future. The following letter from a "Times" correspondent will be read with interest. It is evidently written in a calm, dispassionate spirit, but advises a direct and definite course.

To the Editor of the Times.

SIR,—Half measures are unprofitable and dangerous. The British squadron on the North American and West India station is about to be reinforced in consequence of certain language said to be held forth by the United States Government to our own concerning the island of Cuba. A few words on the subject may not therefore be amiss.

Looking down the vista of the future, one perceives two probable events which are likely to effect the peace of Great Britain—the one and more immediate, the seizure of Cuba by the United States; the other, their appropriation of the Musquito and other territories in Central America. The latter appears now of slight moment, but as years roll on and the Western world increases in importance the possession of the strip of land dividing Northern and Southern America and consequently of the ship canal through the isthmus (which will assuredly be made some day,) will be of a value, both in a military and commercial point of view, that is little thought of while we are absorbed by our European affairs.

Philanthropy, love of peace, commercial interests,—every consideration points to an American war as the greatest curse that could befal Great Britain; yet many and deep thinking people have considered it as a not unlikely event. Look how the present war has been brought abont—a war that was not wished for either by England or Russia. Step by step did Nicholas advance in his ambitious scheme, secure in the English indecision, until, to the regret of both nations, a sanguinary war ensued; whereas had Great Britain firmly taken her stand, and said, "Thus far, and no further shall you go," Russia would have stopped short. Let us not play the like game with the United States but let us clearly and straightforwardly proclaim how far we intend to go in preventing the annexation of Cuba to the United States, and stand by our determination.

In deciding the Cuba question, however, it will be well not to overrate its importance, that the two great Anglo-Saxon nations may not come to loggerheads for a consideration of secondary moment. The matter stands thus:—The United States people are determined to possess Cuba, if they can right or wrong. What great arm will arise from their having it? In their hands the island would increase three times in commercial value, and would thus indirectly benefit England; certainly far more than it does, in the state of moral degradation in which Spain holds it.

If Spain thinks herself strong enough to hold Cuba by force of arms, if required, let her do so; otherwise the most sensible course for her to pursue would be to sell it to the United States; and this she probably will do if not falsely led to believe that England and France will fight her battles for her.

With regard to our present allies, in France, they are less interested in maintaining friendly relations with the United States than ourselves; we should therefore be cautious that a proper anxiety to uphold our French alliance does not lead us into a policy which would be detrimental in other respects.

Your obedient servant,
NO HALF MEASURES.

The subjoined article, which we cut from the European Times of the 27th ult., though according neither with our task nor our sentiments, we give because that Journal is considered specially to cater for the readers of European news on this side of the Atlantic, and also because we think it calculated to assist in the formation of an impartial judgment upon the merits of a movement, in which perhaps the best interests of our peaceful and happy Canada are involved.

The Rupture with America.

The British public were as much startled as the people of the United States will be by the appearance of an article in the leading journal of Thursday, relative to a misunderstanding between this country and the American Union. The article to which we refer will be found in another part of our impression, and although we must admit that the tone of the writing in the journal referred to is for the most part unexceptionable, still, this intemperate diatribe has been very generally condemned, and certainly has met with no response on this side of the water. This, as a test of public opinion in England, is conclusive, and the commercial world were put in possession for the first time, through the medium in question, of the fact that the governments of the two countries were not on terms as friendly as formerly.

The Earl of Ellesmere, in a lecture which he delivered the other evening on the subject of the Russian war to the persons in his own immediate neighbourhood, made a remarkable statement,—remarkable, certainly when taken in connexion with the inflated and bellicose spirit of the article in the "Times," announcing that the British Government had largely reinforced the West India squadron, in order to check the fillibustering expeditions of the worst portions of American society. "If you were to ask me," said his lordship, "which was the most warlike nation in the world, I should say the United States of America. They have many thousands of mile of frontier, and they have next to no army at all; but they have a large population, accustomed to the use of arms, and ready to volunteer in any military expedition. When the invasion of Mexico was projected, which was rather a buccaneering sort of an expedition the government advertised for men, and an army of 20,000 were forthcoming in a fortnight,—This is what I call a warlike nation." Lord Ellesmere has rather under than overstated the case, for we have heard or read that in the city of New York alone 5000 volunteers were enrolled in a single day, and at least twice that number were rejected—the strongest proof of the correctness of the deduction at which he had arrived. To address, then, to this inflammable people such language as the "Times" uses in reference to the misunderstanding between the two countries can have no other object then to precipitate hostilities, and produce the very calamities which the writer professes to deplore. See, for instance, how a desire for peace can be insultingly conveyed:—"We desire above all things," says the first leader in the "Times" of Thursday, "a continuance of peace, but if it be the determination of any large portion of the people of the United States, to force war upon us, we shall know how to meet it, without relaxing for an instant our gripe on the throat of the reeling and tottering giant of the North."

This may appear striking, but in our judgment it is very foolish writing, just that kind of braggadocio in which the fillibusters themselves indulge. There is no determination on the part of any "large portion" of the people of the Union to pick a quarrel with us—quite the contrary. All the men of property and position in the country, all the classes which have the greatest influence on public opinion, would deeply regret a rupture with England, and nothing short of national honor or national insult, would induce them to countenance it; but it must be clear to every cool and reflective man that this defiant style is the most effectual method of neutralising the moral influence of the classes to which we refer, and of strengthening, in the same proportion, all the loafers and fillibusters who are anxious for mischief.

Of course it will be inferred, on the other side of the Atlantic, that the article of which we speak, has been inspired by the Government. Such an impression would be decidedly erroneous. The journal in which it appears is almost invariably antagonistic to the Government, and although scraps of gossip appear occasionally in its pages which have evidently been filtered through Downing-street, the Times, rejoicing in its strength, is above wearing the ministerial livery, and often exhibits its appreciation of such favors by belaboring the Cabinet. Lord Palmerston if the truth was known, would be delighted to see the power of the Times crippled, and we can readily conceive that this mortification was extreme when he read this article in its pages. If the American public will regard the production which has called forth these remarks as a clever, and spicy newspaper article, which appeared in an organ long proverbial for its literary power and impetuosity, but with which we will venture to say the Executive had no more to do than the American Minister himself, they will take it for what it is worth—for anything they like, except the deliberately expressed opinion of the British Cabinet and people.

But while we make this extenuation, we must at the same time admit that there are facts in the article so forcibly put that the sincerest Republican in the Union would be the first to admit their truth. Undoubtedly as the Times states. "It is the misforune of the American Republic that she contains within her borders so many desperate and lawless men." There are few States in Europe or elsewhere with a tithe of the population of the Union which do not contain "deperate and lawless" fellows, always on the look out for confusion, in the hope of enriching themselves at the expense of their neighbours; and the Americans probably do not facilitate themselves on their morality beyond the rest of the world. But the Times is not justified in charging the Federal Government with being in collision with fillibusters and desparadoes, in order to attack and despoil a neighbouring State, which its reasoning in substance amounts to. We call for evidence to substantiate the charge, and we can see no evidence adduced.

Highly Important from Nicaragua.

The Star of the West, which arrived in N. York, on Saturday evening, brought San Francisco advices to the 5th. Her Californian dates have been anticipated, but she brings interesting intelligence from Nicaragua. We learned by telegraph, on Tuesday morning, of the capture of Grenada, the capital of Nicaragua, by Col. Walker—now Gen. Walker, and his forces; the subsequent capture of the fort by a party of Americans, and the firing from the fort upon an expedition to San Carlos, and also on a body of returning Californians, by which six persons were killed and eight wounded. These attacks were evidently made in a spirit of revenge for the success of Walker. We were also informed, by the same source, of the final surrender of Gen. Curral's forces on the 23rd, rendering Walker's victory complete.

Arrival of the "Pacific."

GREAT EXCITEMENT.

TROUBLE WITH THE UNITED STATES.

NEW YORK, Nov. 15, 1855.

The Pacific arrived this morning, at 8 a.m., with news one week later from Europe.

Extraordinary Excitement.

England, relative to the threatened rupture with the United States. Rumors of Mr. Buchanan's withdrawal, and the rumor doubted.

Gen. Simpson is superseded by General Codrington.

The London Times, in a series of skilful, malicious editorials, stated the subject, which exaggerated by the Provincial Press, speedily attained such dimensions that extras were issued, announcing that the American Minister had demanded his passports.

Fear, astonishment and dread were excited by the announcement, and energetic protest were heard against the government, forcing the nation into so dangerous reward.

Further News.

The Pacific has arrived.

Nothing new from the Crimea.

Both armies have gone into winter quarters.

Advance in consols.

NEW YORK, Nov. 15.

The Pacific from Liverpool the 3rd just arrived at her dock at 8½ o'clock this morning.

She brings London and Liverpool dates to Nov. 3rd.

The Pacific made the homeward passage in 10 days.

An extraordinary Panic in England was occasioned by rumors of war with the United States and that Mr. Buchanan had demanded his pasports.

Mr. Buchanan was obliged publicly to contradict this rumor.

Our Liverpool agents telegraphed to His Excellency, the American Minister, who promptly and courteously sent him the following explicit contradiction of the rumor:

LONDON, Night of the 2nd.

'It is not true that the American Minister has demanded his passport from the British Government. There is no foundation for such a report.

Notwithstanding this, an uneasy feeling remains in the public mind.

Nothing important from the seat of war, except the return of the Allies from their advance to their former position of attack against the Russians.

No further operations were to take place this season.

Both armies are preparing for winter.

Some trifling successes have been gained by the fleets, which have now sailed towards the Gulf of Perekop.

Hamilton Seymour has been appointed Minister to Vienna.

General Codrington is appointed Commander in the Crimea, in place of Gen. Simpson.

Lord Stanley, the Earl of Derby's son is offered the Colonel Secretaryship.

The difficulty between France and Naples is settled.

Cotton advanced. Wheat a trifle lower. Flour unchanged. Corn 6d higher. Freights dull. Sugar advanced 5s a 6d. Consols 88½.

Great Britain.

The revenue returns of the United Kingdom, made up to the 30th of September, shows a net increase upon the last quarter of £1,924,124; upon the half year of £2,929,699: and upon the year of £8,344,781. This is chiefly made up by the income tax, the increase upon which is £6,484,147.

The Board of Trade returns, for the month ending 31st of August, show an increase in the declared value of importations as compared with same month last year, of £107,759. A great diminution is shown in the Australian trade; but in the cotton, woollen and linen manufactures and metals there is little variation.

An increase is shown in the arrivals of wheat and Indian corn; but flour, owing to the delay in the American shipments, presented a diminution. According to the shipping returns, the tonage of British vessels entered inwards during the month ending 31st of August, was 427,464; United States, 126,792; other countries, 54 600—total, 708,856. Cleared—British, 520,608; United States, 130,867; other countries, 249,903.

The Bank of England has raised the rate of interest another half per cent, and it now stands at 5½ per cent. There has been a good deal of commercial uneasiness in consequence, particularly as the stock of bullion has been decreasing at an alarming rate for several weeks past—the Bank of France buying up all the specie it can. Several of the journals are crying out for a repeal of Sir Robert Peel's Bank Act. The stock of gold and bullion in the Bank of England on the 4th was £12,368,255.

The Times has a caustic article upon the stupidity of investing "bed-ridden" Generals (Combermere, Strafford and Hardinge) with dignities and emoluments which active and able soldiers ought to receive.

The Queen's visit to Scotland will be prolonged to the 17th.

Sunday, the 30th of September, was marked throughout England as a day of Thanksgiving for the successes in the Crimea.

From the Seat of War.

We have seen a letter, which arrived by the last England mail, from Corporal Wynn, 23rd Royal Welsh Fusileers, dated Sebastopol. He was severely wounded at the Alma, but had recovered und returned to his duty. Two days before the assault on the Redan, he was wounded in the trenches by a six-pounder shot, which passed between his legs, severely injuring both thighs. No immediate danger is, however, anticipated. The writer says: "The poor 23rd regiment lost 316 killed and wounded in the attack on the Great Redan. There are now hardly twelve faces left of those who were with us in Hamilton."—Spectator.

☞ The British force in the Crimea amounts to 33,000 infantry, 9000 artillery, and 6000 cavalry. The French force is set down at 80,000; Turks, 35,000; Sardinians, 15,000. Total, 180,000.

Major Robbins's Self-Acting Railway Break.

An interesting trial took place, on Saturday, on the South Western railway, with a train fitted with Major Robbins's self-acting break. The train consisted of 22 carriages, engine, and tender, and was upwards of 175 yards in length. The first stoppage was made at Farnborough, the rate of travelling being 35 miles per hour, when the train was brought to a stand in about half its own length. The next trial was at the Andover Road Station, down an incline where the gradient is 1 in 100. The train, on this occasion, was brought to a stand in 600 yards—speed when steam was shut off, 48 miles per hour. The last trial was at Winchester when the speed was 55 miles per hour, and the incline downwards 1 in 156. The steam was shut off at the last bridge, and the train brought to a stand before arriving at the next bridge, a distance of 500 yards. This being less than one-third the distance an ordinary train of the same length would require to bring it to a stand.—Morning Chronicle.

Railway Progress.

We are happy to learn that the section of the Grand Trunk Railway between Montreal and Brockville, is to be opened on the 29th of the present month; and the Railway between Hamilton and Toronto, on the 12th December. The Branch line of the Great Western from Galt to Berlin will be opened, as we are informed by the Berlin Canadian, on Monday next. Thus in spite of the times the great work of extending Railways over Canada, goes bravely on.

☞ The Olean Journal says eight fugitive slaves passed through town a day or two since. They were from Culpepper County, Va. It is reported that one of our Silver-Gray neighbors entertained them over night, and otherwise helped them on their way. Just like him. He is a theoretical Uninsaver, but let a poor fugitive come along, and his hands open wider than any man's in community.

☞ Rev. Henry Ward Beecher is lecturing out west, at the very snug little sum of $125 per night, and all expenses paid. This is better than preaching in his church at Brooklyn.

☞ The mammoth furnace appurtenances, near Clarksville, Tenn., was sold last week for $120,000. Among the "appurtenances" were sixty negroes and eight thousand acres of land.

NOTHING LIKE LEATHER.
IF YOU WOULD BE RICH,
Read this, and save your Penny.
GOOD morrow, friend—I'm a stranger in your borough, can you inform me where I can get a pair of good boots made?"
"Yes, sir, I can; just go to T. W. WILSON'S, King St. East, Chatham, next to Smith's Grocery; that's the place; he'll accommodate you most satisfactorily."
"Well, how is your judgment in regard to the quality of boots and shoes?"
"Most excellent—I'm an old boot and shoe maker; many are the days that I've drawn the cords."
"Where did you say I could find him?"
"Why, the next door to Mr. Andrew Smith's Grocery, corner of King and William Streets, East,—any person can tell you."
"Will you conduct me there?"
"I will with pleasure; for I know him to be, from experience, one of the best manufacturers of BOOTS AND SHOES in town. His stock is of his own manufacture, and he has always on hand a superior quality for gentlemen's wear. He's also very particular in getting up his work; so I'm confident he can't fail to give reasonable satisfaction to those who favor him with their patronage."
"There are some boot makers whose work is beautiful to the eye, but plaguy pinching to the feet; and I have lumps upon each instep, which in foul weather give me excruciating pain."
"Ah, yes, too much have I suffered by fetters from the boot moulders hands; but he's not one of them; he endeavours to make a systematic fit, measuring from joint to heel, and from lump to toe—closely observing the most minute protuberance, if there be any upon the feet; and he seldom fails to make his boots set as easy thereon as a glove upon a lady's tender finger. Besides, he always keeps a superior stock on hand; perhaps you might obtain a pair upon the instant, that would fit your feet and please the eye."
"Then I must try him."
"Try him, of course, and you'll save at each end of your bargain. First—you'll buy cheaper—secondly, your boots will wear you longer."
"Come, let's go."
"I'm ready—Are you a cash man?"
"I am; for he who pays cash clips the discount of credit, and secures it in his own pocket."
"Then that's the place, for his motto reads"—
Ask of me no trust, when you come to buy;
Ask of me no trust, for you I must deny;
Ask of me no trust, it hath destroyed many;
Ask of me no trust, I cannot grant you any;
Ask of me no trust, but with your cash rally;
Ask of me no trust, nor with my pocket dally.
T. W. WILSON.

A MORE "IMPORTANT NOTICE!"

American Tract Society—Slavery.

THE Independent, of New York, in an article in that paper, of the 15th March, being one of a continuation of articles regarding the "American Tract Society," has this sentence:—"For thirty years, one of the greatest institutions of Evangelical Christendom, has been testifying in effect, that the institution of Slavery, the buying and selling of human beings, and the profession of the slave-trader, are less offensive to God, less contary to the Gospel, less perilous to the souls of men, than the practice of dancing. It has attempted to exhibit and authenticate, on the widest scale, an administration of Christianity, in which there shall be no more syllable of rebuke for crimes that shock the morals sense of Christendom. The influence of the Tract Society has tended to make the Southern churches more timid and cowed in the presence of the imperious slave-trading interest. As a consequence of this policy—partly, but not exclusively—behold the SOUTHERN APOSTACY!"

In December 1844, a report of "The" Committee of the Synod of New York and New Jersey, on the subject of the mutilations of books by the American Tract Society," was published; and in that report, the mutilations and omissions in the editions published, by that Society, of D'Aubigne's History of the Great Reformation, were pointed out—besides, there are the omissions and expurgations in other books published, as to the vile sin of Slavery, and the substitution of sentences other than the original.

The notice by me entitled, "Publications," referable to these matters, has been widely circulated, and a Canadian public are again reminded of their duty.

A HISTORY OF ALL NATIONS,

FROM THE

EARLIEST PERIODS TO THE PRESENT TIME;

OR

UNIVERSAL HISTORY:

IN WHICH THE HISTORY OF EVERY NATION, ANCIENT AND MODERN, IS SEPARATELY GIVEN.

Illustrated by 70 Stylographic Maps and 700 Engravings

By S. G. GOODRICH,

AUTHOR OF 'PICTORIAL GEOGRAPHY OF THE WORLD,' 'PARLEY'S CABINET LIBRARY,' 'PARLEY'S TALES,' &c.

Complete in one imperial octavo volume, of more than twelve hundred pages of double column letter-press; and upwards of seven hundred elegant illustrations.

It is believed that a Universal History, suitable in form, extent, and arrangement, to the wants of the mass of American readers, has never been presented to the public. For this reason, and in compliance with numerous suggestions from those entitled to respect, the author has undertaken the formidable task of supplying one of a popular character and for general use.

A reader of history should always have in mind two things—viz., the place where, and the time when, an event happened. In the present work therefore, the geography of each country whose history is carefully given; and to aid the reader, seventy stylographic maps have been added. Careful attention, also, has been paid to Chronology, so that, at every page and every chapter, the reader may find the dates of the events which are described.

In order to avoid the confusion which inevitably arises from embracing the whole history of mankind in a general chronological view, the author has adopted an ethnographic arrangement, by which he presents each nation separately. The advantages of this plan for a popular treatise, are obvious. The mind of the reader is not overtasked by a bounless extent of view, nor bewildered by a perplexing multiplicity of objects. On the contrary, everythnig is clear and distinct. Events, instead of being forced out of their true place and connection, are presented in easy and natural succession, thus imparting to the work the attraction and interest of continuous narrative. Another advantage of the plan is, that it not merely admits, but invites descriptive details, illustrative anecdotes, personal adventures and sketches of character, all of which serve not only to give life and effect to the pages of the historian, but to impart the colors of truth and reality to the pictures he may present.

While the work thus presents a separate and distinct history, and also exhibits the present state of every nation, ancient and modern, including the recent revolutions in Europe, still, for the purpose of showing how nations have acted upon or influenced the destinies of one another, General Views are given, at suitable periods, presenting the great movement of mankind, as one family, in its onward march from the past to the present time.

It is proper to state, that while the author promises only a compilation yet he has endeavored to choose from the highest and best authorities; and while the work is offered as a popular treatise, it still seeks to present the practical results of philosophic investigation; and finally, that while justice is rendered to the classic ages the whole work is written in the spirit of modern civilization—which places justice above power, prefers peace to war, and regards the Christian, rather than the soldier, as the true hero of our race.

The work is illustrated with 700 engravings, designed rather for instruction than mere embellishment. Presenting views of cities, monuments, coins, medals, portraits, weapons of war, vehicles for travelling, dress, religious rites and the manners and customs of ancient and modern times.

With a view to render it more valuable, especially in the family library, an ample chronological table is given, with a full index—containing upwards of four thousand historical and geographical names;—thus rendering it a CYCLOPEDIA OF HISTORY, and UNIVERSAL GAZETTEER, available, for daily and familiar use, as a book of reference.

The work is in one imperial octavo volume containing 1200 royal 8vo. pages, in double columns, and embraces as much printed matter as six or eight octavo volumes of ordinary extent.

AND IS BROUGHT DOWN TO THE YEAR 1854.

The following is a notice of it from the Boston Post:

"Of the excellence and character of the compilation we have heretofore spoken, and can, therefore, do little more at present than to repeat ourselves. Not only the philosophy of history, but geology, geography, and astronomy, are discussed, at reasonable length, in the introductory chapters. Then comes a very interesting essay on physical and political geography, followed by a paper on the antediluvian and patriarchal ages. To this succeeds the history of Asia and Africa, from the earliest period to the present time. Then succeeds, in order, the history of Europe and America. In every respect this "Universal History" is to be commended as a useful compilation. For students, as well as for the general reader, it must prove highly attractive. The illustrations answer every purpose, and really illustrate the text. Although called a "history," and thereby ranked by some people with many a drowsy volume, we can assure our readers that they will scarcely find a more readable book, than this under notice. The compiler is neither dull nor tedious. He does his work briefly and clearly, and, in addition to the historical facts, gives many curious anecdotes and statements regarding the manners, customs, social life, religion, government, costume, sports, amusements and employments, of the different nations of the earth. We advise people to look at the publication. It is just the thing for the general reader, being neither deep, nor verbose, nor stupid. It it a compilation made with taste and skill, as well as with patience and labor."

Certificates.

Without professing myself a believer in all varied departments of Phrenology, a Science to which I have given little or no attention, I yet have pleasure in acknowledging that, myself and family having submitted to an examination at the request of Mr. Persons, he gave us, and that with great readiness, as far as I can judge, a very truthful description of our characters. Conscious defects were pointed out. Those faculties which needed cultivation, and those that had been improved and developed by particular pursuits of studies were named, in cases where he could not have known what these were.

As Mr. P. professes his belief in the atonement of Christ as the only ground of acceptance with God, and in the necessity of the influences of the Holy Spirit to regenerate the soul and to enable us to improve what is defective in us, and in the hope that it may be his object to become practically acquainted with thest truths nimself, and to cause their influence to be felt in his teachings, I trust that he will meet with success in his classes.

BUFFALO, Feb, 21st 1853.

This is to certify that the Bearer, Wm. Persons, is deeply imbued with the spirit and doctrines of Phrenology, has attended my lectures, and read my works; that he has a first rate natural talent for prosecuting this science, that I strongly recommend him, while examining his head, and before I knew him, to follow this science as a permanent profession; that I recommend him to the public as talented and worthy of patronage, and think him calculated to do good.

PROSPECTUS.

LIFE ILLUSTRATED,

A NEW FIRST CLASS

Family Newspaper,

Devoted to News, Literature, Science, and the Arts; to Entertainment, Improvement and Progress.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY, AT $2 A YEAR.

BY FOWLERS & WELLS,

It is our purpose to furnish a journal, which, bound to no party, sect, or theory, embracing every human interest, and furnishing food for all the faculties of the mind, shall merit a world-wide circulation.

LITERATURE,

in the form of Original Essays, Historical, Biographical, and Descriptive Sketches of Travel and Adventure. Poetry, Painting, Music, and Sculpture, etc., from the pens of our best writers, with choice selections from the leading periodicals of Europe, will form a prominent feature. The great field of

SCIENCE,

in all its departments, will be explored, and all new discoveries laid before our readers in a popular form. THE ARTS, particularly in the departments of Agriculture, Mechanical Industry, and Manufactures, will receive attention, and no invention or improved process will escape our notice.

AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE,

in which so large a portion of our people are engaged, will demand at our hands special consideration. We shall endeavor to elevate still more the standard of MECHANICAL INDUSTRY, and to develop and bring to light the latent talent and skill of our intelligent and worthy artisans.

PHYSIOLOGY

and the Laws of Life, in their application to physical development and the promotion of health will have a prominent place in our columns.

EDUCATION,

in its broadest sense will be encouraged, and, aided by contributors, engaged in teaching in college, school, and shop, we shall try to render the pursuit of knowledge easy and attractive.

NEW BOOKS

will be carefully and candidly noticed, and where their importance seems to demand it, critically reviewed. In the department of

GENERAL NEWS,

we shall be prompt, authentic, and full, giving a carefully prepared summary of passing events, both foreign and domestic, and recording all signs of progress in every department of life. THE MARKETS will be carefully reported, and such general, commercial, and financial information given as the interests of our readers demand.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE.

We shall make our paper a welcome and valued visitor at every fireside. THE CHILDREN will find, in each number, a snug corner set apart for their amusement and instruction.

Kind reader, an outline of our plan is before you. Do you like it? If so, we shall be happy to receive your subscription and influence in behalf of Humanity, and our newenterprise.

Exhibitions and Lectures.

THE Undersigned proposes exhibiting the Diorama of Uncle Tom's Cabin, in the principal Cities, Towns, and Villages in the Northern States and Canada; and to accompany them with abundant evidence as to the truthfulness of the facts assumed by the author, in the work known by that name, which will include the recital of some most mysterious and thrilling incidents in the history of his own family. The flight of his parents for freedom—their capture, and return to slavery and their second flight; a history of their lost boys, who were stolen and sold into slavery—the death of one of them, and the redemption of the other by the purchase of himself; and the final purchase for the enormous sum of five thousand dollars.

The paintings, comprising the scenes of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," are the production of an eminent French artist, and show as large as life, and represent the most prominent scenes and characters in the work.

In order to render our labors more effectual and create more general interest and benefit, we propose the following arrangements, viz:—To give one half of the receipts to any Church or Society, or regularly appointed committee by the pupil, who will provide a place, secure an audience, and defray the expenses incident to the meeting.

An arrangement by which every Church or Society in the country may replenish their funds, aid their pastors, or whatever other benevolent object that commends itself to public patronage.

Let such then who would help the cause, help themselves, and help us in our feeble endeavours to enlist the public ear to the cries of bleeding humanity; go at once to work, communicate immediately with us preparatory to an exhibition.

We shall not however confine ourselves to that deplorable and humiliating aspect of the colored man's case, repesented in that work.

But we promise at no distant date, a new programme of very different scenes, representing not only an entirely original, but a far more hopeful aspect of the black man, than has ever been presented to the American public.

It is neither egotism, nor vet flattery, in us to say that this mode of giving instruction possesses the double merit of engaging those two most important faculties that man possesses—the mind and the sight at the same time, and making an ineffacable impression. It is not as being necessarily dependent and degraded, then that, we shall confine our exhibitions of his character.

There have been places where, and times when the black man of modern times has proven himself the patriot, the statesman, and the warrior. As such, then, let him be known to the world, that it may acknowledge it, and to our youth, that they may imitate their example and copy their virtues.

We suffer more perhaps, from false representation, than all other ills put together.

Those amongst us who have acted the part of patriot are represented to be vicious and ungovernable: and those whom the most direful and crushing prejudices have debarred from the opportunities for higher development are represented as submissive willing underlings. Generation after generation are stamped with the same false impressions, and learn to assume it on the one hand, and regard it as a fixed inevitable fact on the other.

We are arranging a new and a very extensive programme of Distinguished Colored Men and the incidents with which they have been connected and acquitted themselves honorably—such as ATTICUS, "the first martyr of the Revolution," the "Colored Regiments at the Battle of New Orleans," and the distin

Poetry.

A GOOD OLD POEM.

Who shall judge a man from nature?
Who shall know him by his dress?
Paupers may be fit for princes,
Princes fit for something less.
Crumpled shirt and dirty jacket
May beclothe the golden ore
Of the deepest thought and feeling,
Satin vests could do no more.
There are springs of crystal nectar
Ever swelling out of stone—
There are purple buds and golden,
Hidden, crushed and overgrown.
God, who counts by souls not dresses,
Loves and prospers you and me,
While he values thrones the highest,
But as pebbles on the sea.

Man, upraised above his fellows
Oft forgets his fellows, then;
Masters, rulers, lords, remember
That your meanest hand are men,
Men of labor, men of feeling,
Men by thought and men by fame,
Claiming equal rights to sunshine
In a man's announcing name.
There are foam embroidered oceans,
There are little weed clad rills,
There are feeble inch high saplings,
There are cedars on the hill.
God, who counts by souls, not stations,
Loves and prospers you and me,
For to him all vain distinctions
Are as pebbles on the sea.

Toiling hands alone are builders
Of a nation's wealth and fame;
Titled laziness is pensioned,
Fed and fatteded on the same,
By the sweat of other's foreheads,
Living only to rejoice,
While the poor man's outraged freedom
Vainly lifted up his voice—
Truth and justice are eternal,
Born with loveliness and light;
Secret wrong shall never prosper
While there is a starry night.
God, whose world-heard voice is singing
Boundless love to you and me,
Sinks opposition with its titles,
As the pebbles on the sea.

Humor and Wit.

Long John and the Landlady.

John, tall and a wag, was sipping his tea,
When his landlady, rather uncivilly free,
Accosted him: 'Sir, a man of your metre
Must be, I should think, a very large eater!'
'Nay, nay,' quoth the wag, 'tis not as you say,
For a little with me, goes a very long way!'

The Printer—the master of all trades. He beats the farmer with his Hoe, the carpenter with his rule, and the mason in setting up tall columns. He surpasses the lawyer and doctor in attending to his case, and beats the parson in the management of the Devil.

☞ An Irishman called in great haste upon Dr. Abernethy, stating that—"Be dad, me boy, Tim has swallowed a mouse!"

"Then be dad," said the Dr., "tell your boy Tim to swallow a cat."

☞ If a girl thinks more of her heels than her head, depend upon it she will never amount to much. Brains which settle in the shoes never get above them. Young gentlemen will please put this down.

☞ The following advertisement, under the head of "A Wife Wanted," is in the Batesville, Ark. News:

'Any gal what's got a bed, coffee pot, and skillit; knows how to cut out britches, can make a huntin' shirt, and knows how to take care of children, can have my services until death parts both of us.'

☞ The cradle is woman's ballot box.—Lucy Stone.

Some of them put in two and three votes at once, which is illegal—Is n't it?

☞ A person who was recently called in Court, for the purpose of proving the correctness of a doctor's bill, was asked by the lawyer whether "the doctor did not make several visits after the patient was out of danger?" "No," replied the witness. "I considered the patient in danger as long as the doctor continued his visits!"

Progressive.

'Come up, you first class of vagabonds in geography and logic,' cried Larry O'Rourke, the Irish schoolmaster. George, give a description of the airth and show yer larnin.'

'Yes sir. The earth is a wast globe, filled with mud, filth, tadpoles, mud-larks, Sebastopoles and Shanghais.'

'All right. What are its products?'

'Whisky, gin, Nebraska bills, busted banks and shinplasters.'

'Whar is America?'

'All over creation—it is the paradise where ould father Adam, the fust fillibuster, was turned out on.'

'Who was Adam's wife?'

'Why, Mrs. Adams, I reckon, and, she was born in ould Ireland.'

'Ay, indade she was, Smart, boy—you'll be a man before your mother, sure. Go up to the head.'

☞ If the doctor gets his living by pillage, what does the lawyer get his by? By bad deeds; to be sure.

☞ An exchange paper quotes from Paul's writings, "Owe no man anything;" and then adds: "We fear some of our subscribers never read Paul's Epistle."

☞ A young man having attended a Quaker meeting was asked how he liked it. "Like it," said he "it's enough to kill the devil!" "That is just what we want," retorted a leading Quaker.

Miscellaneous.

Glimpses at Society.

"And so Kitty Clifton is to be married this day week," said I, to her friend, the young and gay Mrs. Aldrict.

"Yes she is to be married, the dear girl. And do you know what a beautiful trousseau she has? Why her diamonds alone, which of course the bridegroom presented, cost $1,000; and everything else in proportion. Ah! the dear girl!"

"And are you sure she loves him whom she is to marry, Mrs. Aldrict?" asked I, sadly. "Can she love that old unlovable man—she, the young, gentle, and loving girl?"

"Love him! Why yes, to be sure, well enough. She likes the dazzle, and splendor and eclat attending such a match. And—she likes him well enough, I dare say."

"Poor, poor girl!" added I, while the tears come welling up. "And this is the way young girls marry. Heaven help us—Heaven help us!"

"But does she know aught of housekeeping at all?" inquired I.

"Housekeeping!" echoed Mrs. Aldrict.—"About as much as my Nelly's wax doll, I dare say. But then, she'll have plenty of servants; so it don't matter in the least. He does not marry her, to labor."

"Ah!" replied I; "but every lady should be the head of her own domestic concerns, be she rich or be she poor."

"All your old-fashioned notions, Mrs. H. ——. Nobody but you retains them these days, I can assure you. Why, you would not have our darling Kitty make a slave of herself!"

"No, but I would have her know how to take care of her servants," was the answer.

"But I thought servants were to take care of us," added Mrs. Aldrict, laughing. "You quite reverse the order of things."

"Ah my dear; but you know what I mean," continued I. "Can your friend tell when her domestic duties are properly attended to, or assist when they are not? Can she make bread, for instance, or a pie, or a pudding?"

"No, indeed, Mrs. H., Kitty was not born to be a drudge."

"And tell me what she would do if her servants were ill, or faithless, or in any way remiss in their duties?"

"Why, starve perhaps, as I should; for, if there were not another soul above my house, I could not prepare a meal of victuals. That is not my business."

"And pray what is your business?" asked I, waxing a little warm. In fact, I was quite ashamed of my sex, and of their gross ignorance in their mothers, wherein—yes, I say it boldly, every lady should be instructed! "Pray, what is your business?"

"Why to dress, visit, and receive visits. To play and sing, &c. In short, to amuse myself and make my husband happy, to be sure. What more would you have?"

"Poor child; poor, foolish child!" exclaimed I, as, turning away, I sought my own room. "Alas for our wives, for our mothers, and for our homes! God help them, lest they be such only in name."

CHAPTER II.

"And so Stanly, Poor Kitty Clifton's husband is utterly ruined, I hear. I wonder what can have been the matter, he was supposed to have been immensely rich."

"O, the old story—helpless and extravagant wife; wasteful and dishonest servants; dissipation, and all sorts of excesses. Poor Kitty Clifton! I wonder what will become of her now," continued the speaker, one of Kitty's dear five hundred friends in her prosperity."

"Indeed, I don't know," answered Mrs. Ames. "But surely we must drop her. She cannot expect to be received into society any more. Do you think so, Mrs. Gray?"

"Of course not; not where she has been. But poor thing! may be she'll not mind it much. 'Tis only since her marriage she has moved among us. She will only sink back again to her olden self. Pity she ever rose above it."

"But they say she is almost heart-broken," added Mrs. Ames, compassionately; "and, she is indeed a good-hearted, amiable sort of a person. 'Tis really a pity that her reign has been so short. On the whole, I wonder if it is well to educate girls as she has been educated?"

"And pray what can we do? Society has laid certain restrictions upon us. Would you dare her, and stand aloof from all?"

"Indeed, indeed, I know not. 'Tis a hard question to answer. But this much I do believe. There is evil, ay, a great evil somewhere. God only grant it be not upon our heads. Well, will I ponder this matter; and, Heaven helping me, will find the sin. And, being found, from mine own heart it shall be plucked, though my very life go with it."

A Beautiful Simile.

A few days since a lovely little child of four summers was buried in this town.

On leaving the house of its parents, the clergyman, Rev. McKay, plucked up by the roots a beautiful little "forget-me-not," and took it with him to the grave.

After the little embryo of humanity had been deposited in the grave, the clergyman, holding up the plant, said:—I hold in my hand a beautiful flower which I plucked from the garden we have just left. In taking it from its parent home it was withered, but I here plant it in the head of this grave, and it will soon revive and flourish.

So with the little flower we have planted in the grave. It has been plucked from its native garden, and was wilted, but it is transplanted into the garden of immortality—where it will revive and flourish in immortal glory and beauty.—Ohio Farmer.

A Petrified Indian.

While engaged in excavating recently upon the Milwauki and La Cross Railroad, near Schlesengerville, Iowa, the workmen came upon the petrified remains of an Indian, and with the remains some singular relics of the olden times. The body was perfect, not having suffered by decay. His height, at the present time, would be considered gigantic, measuring seven feet two inches. On his breast was a plate of copper, on which were engraved numerous hieroglyphics, the meaning of which can hardly be imagined. But there they are, a record of the past. Could these hieroglyphics be read, they might perhaps, unveil some of the mystery that hangs like a dark cloud over the history of the red man. An arrow of considerable strength, and curious construction was also found with him, and especially invite the attention of antiquaries.

Rendering Teeth Insensible to Pain.

The Dublin Hospital Gazette states that diseased teeth have been rendered insensible to pain by a cement composed of Canada balsam and slackened lime, which is to be inserted in the hollow tooth, like a pill. It is stated that such pills afford immediate relief in all tooth-aches but chronic cases of inflammation. This remedy for tooth-ache is simple, safe, and can easily be tried by any person.

Pruning in Autumn.

The late W. S. Cole, who strongly recommends autumnal pruning for fruit trees, says, "thirty-two years ago, in September, we cut a very large branch from an apple tree, on account of an injury by a gale. The tree was old, and it has never healed over, but it is now sound, and almost as hard as horn, and the tree perfectly hard around it. A few years before and after, large limbs were cut from the same tree in the spring, and where they were cut off the tree has rotted, so that a quart measure may be put in the cavity."

Apple Orchards.

A paint of very thin, soft soap, is far better for the bark of trees than whitewash, because it actually kills all insects and their eggs in the crevices of the bark, and because its good effects continue through the whole season, instead of ending as soon as it becomes dry.

☞ Young ladies, beware of flashy gentlemen. Fine clothes don't make the man. Moustaches, whiskers, and frizzled hair, frequently adorn the vagabond. Just ascertain, before admitting him to your society, whether the tailor and barber, hav'nt contributed more in his 'making up', than good character and manly principle. Beware of flashy flunkeys and fashionable vagabonds in disguise. Investigate the animal before giving away your affections.

The Magazine under the Redan.

The following is an extract of a letter from Sebastopol, professing to show how the Redan escaped from being blown up by the Russians, like the other forts:—"A sapper, who was exploring the batteries of the Redan just as the Russians were evacuating the town, discovered a rather large cable, which he cut in two by a blow of an axe, and then called the attention of the officers to it. On further examination it was found to be a thick metallic wire covered with a coating of gutta percha. The wire led to a very large powder magazine dug under the Redan and the discovery of which made the boldest tremble, when they thought of the frightful explosion from which they had escaped. The wire came from across the town as far as the sea, which it crossed to the other shore, from whence the electric spark was to be despatched to set fire to that volcano. It was discovered just at the nick of time, as the last soldier had not yet evacuated the town when the forts blew up one after another, filling up the trenches with the ruins. The Careening Port and Flagstaff Battery, the Central Bastion, the forts of the bay, and the arsenal, and all the principal edifices, crumbled to the ground beneath the combined action of shells, fire, and mines. The Redan and the Malakoff alone remained upstanding, the former saved by the sapper, as just mentioned, and the latter saved by a shell which, directed by Providence, had cut the electric wire in two.

A Man's Hand Bitten off by a Horse.

A surgical operation was performed at Fort Pitt Hospital, Chatham, on Monday, on a soldier named Thos. Dance, belonging to the 12th Lancers, who had his arm amputated for the second time, in consequence of the frightful injuries he received from being bitten by a ferocious horse in the Crimea. Dance was engaged at Balaklava drawing water for troops, and whilst so occupied saw a horse, with main and tail erect, galloping towards him. In a moment the horse seized him in his mouth, threw him down, and kneeling on his body with his fore legs, commenced tearing his clothes off, lacerating his breast and shoulder in a frightful manner. The poor fellow put out his hand to protect the lower part of his body, when the animal seized it in his mouth, and bit it off. Some of his comrades coming to his succour, armed with stout clubs, the ferocious beast was beaten off. Before, however, the horse could be secured, he bit off the finger of another man, and severely injured the shoulder of the veterinary surgeon of the regiment. The horse was of Arab breed.

REVIEW.

Canada and Her Resources—An Essay. By Alexander Morris, A. M. Montreal: John Lovell. 1855.

This publication obtained second place in the competition for the Prize essays of Canada and her Resources, and is a work of considerable merit. It is replete with valuable information, and though not likely to be taken up to while away an idle hour, is of a nature to become a safe book of reference to all those who want practical and useful information on Canadian statistics. Mr. Morris has scarce attempted to garnish with light and attractive remarks the dry detail of facts and figures with which such a work must of necessity abound, although he has proved by his judicious remarks, where indulged in, that he is fully competent to do so. He has, perhaps, also entered into too much minutiæ, particularly on the geology of Canada, for the generality of readers, yet with these drawbacks we still prefer Mr. Morris's Essay to that of his more successful competitor, the winner of the first prize. Where Mr. Morris has indulged in matter descriptive or illustrative, he is happy in his language, and chaste in his style; as an instance of which we may quote the following passage from his introductory remarks:—

"The Province of Canada is attracting increased and deservedly merited attention. Her resources have of late years been rapidly developing, and the growth of her population is steadily and annually augmenting. A bright future is opened out to her progress, agricultural, commercial and industrial, cannot fail to be much accelerated, so soon as the people of Great Britain and of Europe come to be aware of the many advantages which are held out to intending emigrants by this important dependency of the British Crown.

"No country in the world,—we boldly aver it,—offers a more desirable residence than Canada, for her attractions consist not only in every material comfort, but also in the gift of political liberty and educational advantages to all her inhabitants; and these attractions are held out, not merely to that class of emigrants who have some small means, or to that other class who are possessed of comparatively greater means, but to whom increasing families and the keen competition of the old world make a change to the new desirable, but also to the industrious mechanic, to the hardy agriculturist, and, in fact, to all classes of settlers."

Mr. Morris then proceeds to describe the geological structure of the Province, we think rather at too much length. From thence he passes to the geographical outlines, natural productions, manufactories, commerce, social educational and political institutions, and closes with some observations upon the climate well calculated to remove the delusions under which many labor on that point. The observations of Mr. Morris on some of these subjects are sound and judicious. From these we cannot avoid selecting those passages which relate to the agriculture of Canada, so large a portion of immigrants passing immediately into its pursuits. He says:—

By far the greater extent of the Canadas is admirably adapted for agricultural pursuits, as the exports of agricultural products for the years 1852 and 1853 amply proves, the export of the former year being £1,214,214 3s 10d, and of the latter £1,995,094 15s 9d; while the total growth of what in 1851, in all Canada, is calculated by the Board of Registration and Statistics as having been 15,162,662 bus. Of this quantity, 4,276,871 bus. were exported in that year, as wheat and flour. The home consumption is nearly 5½ bus. per individual. In the United States, during the last ten years, the growth of wheat has increased upwards of 400 per cent. The average produce of wheat per acre in Upper Canada is 16 14-60ths per acre, and in Lower Canada 7 8-60ths. In the latter Province, during the last ten years, the growth of fall wheat has been either wholly abandoned or it is only sown intermittingly, owing to the ravages of the fly, but it is believed its general cultivation may be eventually resumed. Black Sea wheat is the variety now chiefly planted in Lower Canada, and is sown in the spring. Canada exports large quantities of butter of good quality. The amount of butter produced in the Upper Province has in three years increased 372 per cent, and that of cheese 233 per cent; but the returns are deficient as to Lower Canada. The soil of Canada is adapted and the climate favorable to the growth of wheat, peas, rye, barley, oats, buckwheat, hay, hemp, and flax, grass seed, Indian corn, and potatoes,—and of all these large quantities are raised. Upper Canada is best adapted for wheat, and produces it most largely, but Lower Canada grows no inconsiderable quantity, and produces also large quantites of peas, oats, and coarser grains generally. It so I is also well adapted for the growth of root crops, which should be more extensively grown, in view of the importance of fodder, which is rendered more valuable in consequence of the length of the winter. Flax and hemp might also be grown with great advantage to the country. Lower Canada is especially suited for their growth, and these articles might prove a great source of industrial wealth, and give employment to a thrifty population. Hemp and flax grow with the greatest luxuriance. 'The fibre of Canadian flax has been ascertained to be of the best description, and the Society for the encouragement of arts years ago determined, by actual experiment, that Canadian hemp is equal to that from the Baltic.' In view of the former large export of flax to Britain from Russia, and its present interruption, it is most important that its growth should be encouraged in Canada, as the demand in England is greater than the supply. In 1851, the import into Britain, of flax and hemp, amounted to 2,495,672 cwt. Ireland produces a considerable quantity, but 100,000 tons more fibre are consumed in Britian than is produced there, and this quantity Russia and Northern Europe has supplied to Britain at a cost of $50,000,000 or £12,500,000. This, then, is a favourable juncture for Canada to enter upon a new and profitable branch of industry. In the chapter on statistics fuller details will be found as to the agricultural products of Canada, and a contract will there be instituted between the productiveness of the Province and that of some of the adjoining States of the American Union. From the great diversity of climate, the goodness of the soil, and its adaptation to the growth of cereals, Canada cannot fail to continue to be, as it already is, a large exporter of wheat and other grains, and take high rank as an agricultural country."

Many will learn with surprise that Canada is also rapidly beginning to be a manufacturing country, and in this field has already beaten many older countries. Her capabilities for still further excellence in such branches of industry, are well set forth in the following observations, page 63:—

"The manufactures of the Province are yet in their infancy, but are annually increasing in variety and extent, and rising in importance. Lower Canada especially is admirably adapted for the extension of manufactures. The long winter, in which comparatively few of the departments of out-door agricultural labour can be engaged in, and the peculiarly appropriate character of the industrious French Canadians of the interior adapting them for such occupations, render it very desirable that the facilities afforded by the abundant water powers and comparative cheapness and plentifulness of labour, capable of becoming skilled, should to a large extent be taken advantage of. We shall then see from one of its fertile valleys to another a chain of thronging factories extended; and the clang of the heavy hammer, and the jar of machinery, and the busy hum of human industry will mingle with and be heard high above the rapid splash and echoing fall of the many streams which, now lavish of power, invite the labour of the artisan. Even in their embryo state, many of the manufactures of the country are worthy of special notice. New branches of productive industry are continually arising, and new manufactures are carried on. For instance, the banks of the Lachine Canal, at Montreal, are being clustered with busy manufactories. A large sugar refinery has been erected. An Indian rubber manufactory is in active operation. Paint mills, axe factories, machine shops, nail and spike factories are carried on. The railway system has created large railway car and locomotive works. Marine, fire and other engine works are also carried on, as are also carding and fulling mills, and cotton and woollen factories. Among the other recent manufactories of Lower as well as Upper Canada may be mentioned tanneries, foundries, pail factories, oat-meal and grist mills, lathe and and planing mills, potteries, asheries, shingle factories, slate works, ochre works, soap and candle works, starch factories, distilleries, cooperages, brick yards, rope walks, thrashing mill factories, chair factories, breweries, ship yards, barley mills, saleratus works, match and rake factories. Ship building is a very important trade in and about the City of Quebec, and gives employment to a very large number of hands; while the colonial built vessels for build and strength, have acquired a high reputation.

"In addition to the manufactories mentioned as in operation in Lower Canada may be named, as being in existence in Upper Canada, besides those enumerated above, also scythe and rake factories, large and extensive woollen cloth and blanket works, stoneware factories, mustard mills, plaster mills, sash factories, spade and shovel works, whip, broom and cigar, and vinegar factories. Among the minor manufactories perhaps the tanneries may be mentioned as the most important and extensive; none of these have, however, yet attained to the position and extent of similar works in older countries, and some of them are humble enough in their character; still the day of small things is not to be despised, and in these indications of industrial energy and activity can be foreseen those vast future work-shops, for which Canada may be the site, when its population shall have increased to but a tythe of the numbers which it can sustain without over crowding.

Upon the Commerce of Canada we have also some valuable information and sound practical suggestions. We have long been of opinion that there is a vast field open to us in a future Inter-Colonial Trade, not only with the Lower British American Provinces but also with the West Indies. Mr. Morris appreciates the vast field here open for Canadian enterprise, and upon this point makes the following very judicious observations, p. 740—

"The writer has long entertained the firm conviction, that the trade between Canada and the Lower Provinces is destined to become a large and extensive one. Nova Scotia especially is so well situated for commanding the trade of the West Indies, that the trade between Canada and Halifax, owing to the peculiar geographical position of that port, cannot fail to be much developed within a short period. The breadstuffs and timber of Canada will there find a market for home consumption, and for export to the West Indies. The schooners and other craft of our lakes, instead of lying idle during a long winter, and thus locking up a large capital, may yet, descending the St. Lawrence in the Autumn, laden with breadstuffs, find a market for their cargoes in Cuba, Bermuda and Jamaica, and ply during the winter months between the Lower Provinces and the West Indian Islands, and finally return with a cargo of sugar in spring, to resume their place on the Canadian Lakes. It is true the necessity of being early on the lakes in spring may interfere perhaps to prevent all our craft from engaging in this enterprise: but the owner of several vessels would find the detention of a portion of his fleet for a month in early spring, while the remainder of it was actively engaged in the lake trade, amply compensated by the steady lucrative employment during the long winter of those vessels which had engaged in the inter-colonial trade. If such a trade can be created, rendering productive during the whole year the large amount of capital engaged in the lake transit trade, it cannot but prove beneficial to the country, and that apart from the many other incidental advantages which will arise from it. But whether this be found practicable or not, undoubtedly a large trade will be carried on, during the summer months, between Canada and the several lower ports, in breadstuffs and timber on the one hand, and in sugar, molasses, coal and fish on the other. If proper measures are adopted to free this trade from restrictions, and give it unfettered scope, a goodly fleet of provincial vessels will be found during summer plying between Montreal, Quebec, and Halifax, and in winter between Halifax and the West Indian Islands. If such measures be adopted as I have already hinted at—if the coal and fish of Nova Scotia and the productions of the West Indian Colonies be admitted free of duty, they reciprocating by the free admission of our flour, wheat and timber—all the Colonies would benefit; a great trade would spring up, the St. Lawrence would assume its legitimate importance in relation to the supply through Canada of the Great West; and the Colonies would be drawn more closely together, and rendered mutually helpful of each other.

"It will be for the Canadian people therefore to consider whether their trade with the West Indian Colonies & the Lower Provinces cannot be put on a more favorable footing, and one reciprocally beneficial. A species of Zollverein might thus be created, contributing materially to the strengthening of the various British dependencies, and conducing to the extension of the intercolonial trade."

We might make some further extracts from the essay of Mr. Morris, but our space will not permit. We do not, however, hesitate to recommend it as a manual of practical information, not only for those who are strangers to the country, and may desire to settle in it, but also for the old settlers, who will in its pages find much of both instruction and useful matter.

The Underground Railroad.

The Cleveland Leader had the following announcement in relation to the operations of the Underground Railroad.

"The amount of property carried on it for the week ending on the 27th inst., was worth, in the South, at least $30 000. Last Friday the cars came very nigh running off the track, but the freight came through in safety."

The above extract is copied in the Chicago Tribune of the 2d inst., and will, no doubt, take the rounds of the abolition papers. It would seem that the editor of the Leader is either President, Director, or Conductor of one of the Underground Railroads, and that he and his co-labourers ("in the great cause") are not ashamed to publish their graceless acts to the world. The establishment of abolition papers and Underground Railroads in the opinion of Abolitionists, is no interference with the rights of the people of the South—that the stealing of $20,000 of slaves weekly is no just cause for the South to complain. In other words, disturbing the peace and breaking the laws of the country, are no crimes. It would be creditable to Cleveland, if the editor of the Leader, and his co-labourers, could be kicked over into Canada. They are a disgrace to our country, men who, in a revolution, would become second Arnolds, with the treason in their hearts which marked the betrayer of Washington, but with none of his bravery. —Indianapolis Journal.

Prosecution of Judge Kane.

It is fortunate for the ends of justice that Judge Kane is to be tried upon the charge of false imprisonment, not in the city, but in the country, where there is a chance for an honorable and incorruptible jury. Judge Haines, of West Chester, whose office it will be to preside on the occasion, is a man who cannot be overawed by the minions of the Slave Power. If Kane is convicted the case will probably go to the State Supreme Court on appeal, and finally, perhaps, to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Fugitive Slaves in Canada.

A writer in the Christian Watchman and Reflector, who has recently visited the settlements of the colored people in Canada, gives an interesting account of these Fugitives from American oppression, and corrects some erroneous opinions that are quite current in the States. The fate of these unfortunate people,—who have sought under a monarchical government the enjoyment of those rights which are denied to them in this Democratic Republic,—ought not to be regarded with indifference by those who think the declaration that all men are created equal, is something more than a flourish of rhetoric. We have condensed a few facts, from the article alluded to, to which we invite the reader's attention.

The number of fugitive slaves in Canada is estimated, at 40,000, most of whom have settled in the Province within twenty years. There does not appear to be any diminution in the tide, notwithstanding the efforts made to secure and reclaim this uncertain species of property. The fugitives have mostly come from the Northern Slave States. In so great a number, there is room for a wide variety of character, conduct and condition; and this has doubtless given rise to the conflicting statements we so frequently hear in regard to them. Some are industrious, virtuous, thriving, and others directly the reverse. The writer thinks that about one-third of those who come directly from slavery in mature years, appear to regard their escape as the summum bonum, and instead of making it merely a means to a higher and worthier end, they set down content with liberty, merely living on from hand to mouth; and since labor is not enforced by a taskmaster, they are content to live as indolently and shiftlessly as their necessities will allow. The worst that can be said of this class, is, that they evince, painfully and unmistakably, the degrading influence of the subjection in which they have been held. But even in these cases the writer could find not a single instance which verified the representation so frequently met with in the States, "that so much worse do these people find their condition in Canada than it had been in their bondage, that they would willingly return to their masters." Indeed the very idea is preposterous, for if they wished to return to bondage, there is not the slightest impediment in their way. And they know right well that they have nothing to fear in such a case. Those masters from whom they had escaped would lionize them to the utmost, for the sake of the influence on their other servants, would they but return and profess themselves dissatisfied with the experiment of freedom.

But the majority of the colored people in Canada, and nearly all who escaped from bondage early in life, are represented as industrious, moderately enterprising and decidedly thriving in their circumstances. They gather around them each year more and more of the comforts and the simple embellishments of life. They educate their children, and keep their women from field-work, in order that they may give attention to making HOME-delightful. The climate, it is true, is an uncongenial one, to the negro, but after all, the writer thinks they suffer less from the rigors of a Northern winter than is usually supposed. When supplied with comfortable clothing and houses, and plenty of nourishing food, their power of enduring the cold is scarcely inferior to that of their white neighbours.

The colored people uniformly speak of the kindness which they have experienced from the Canadians, both the government and individuals. Good land is furnished them either as a donation, or at prices so reasonable that the industrious and enterprising find no difficulty in soon owning a homestead of their own. The spirit of caste does not prevail as it does among us; and while there is no amalgamation of races, they ride and sit, both in the house of God and elsewhere, side by side with their white neighbours.

The testimony of this writer on two other points is not quite so satisfactory. The churches established among the fugitives do not compare favorably with the colored churches at the South, which are composed principally of slaves. We also infer although it is not expressly asserted, that a feeling of jealousy prevails to some extent among the whites, some of whom regard the congregation of such members of another hue and race, as dangerous to their own interests. There is, however, no real ground for such apprehensions, and the sentiment is probably confined to the more narrow and illiberal class of whites. Long enough before the escaped fugitives shall become so numerous in Canada, as to induce apprehension from their influence, let us hope that more just and tolerant laws, on our own side of the line, will make it unnecessary that this unfortunate class shall seek a home there.—New England Farmer.

Bond and Free.

A Remarkable Narrative.

A few nights since, there passed through this city, on the railroad, bound for Canada, a family of eight fugitive slaves. One of these—the leading spirit of the whole—was a woman sixty years of age, a bold, courageous, prompt, and energetic woman. Two years ago she was living as a slave in the South. She was the mother of six children, all of whom she had seen torn from her arms when old enough to be useful, and sold away from her. One day she overheard her master bargaining with a soul-driver, who desired to purchase for the far South, her grandson, a boy of some fifteen years old. Stung to the quick by this design of stripping her of the last of her kindred, she instantly resolved on flight.

The same night she started with her boy for the North. Night after night they travelled by the North star—the only guide the hapless fugitive knows in making for the land of Freedom, and one that deceives him not, since it is fixed in the heavens. After long and painful wanderings, they arrived in Canada.

Here this heroic woman hired herself at wages. Two months ago, with purse well filled, she started back to the residence of her old master in the South. Here, alone, she concealed herself in woods and thickets, a fugitive from Freedom—cared for, however by the few trusty souls to whom she revealed the dangerous secret of her presence in the land of bondage. After remaining there some two weeks, she collected seven of her children and grand-children, and started with them for the North. Long and slow and anxious was their journey. The same unerring star shone faithfully from above upon their midnight pathway. By day they lay by, concealed among the thickets of the country, through which they made a bee line for North. No toil discouraged, no danger dismayed this heroic woman. Many times the party suffered to the verge of starvation. She cheered them onward—she was their only "guide, their counsellor and friend."

Worn down with the hardships of this perilous journey, with garments torn to shreds and fluttering in the breeze; with shoes worn into fragments; without hats or bonnets, this heroine conducted her party to the house of a friend. Word was immediately passed around among some of the good souls who dwelt there as the salt of the earth, that eight fugitives were concealed in a garret, and destitute of the means of further progress. The word was followed by the deed. All necessary means were instantly provided for their safe transmission to the North; and the train which passed through this city, on the same night, carried the whole party toward the home of their leader, in Canada, where they have by this time undoubtedly arrived.

We doubt if a similar instance of devotion to friends and kindred is on record. It required a daring mind to even conceive the idea of going back to the scene of bondage, and encountering the hazard of discovery in the lion's den. But nothing short of that heroism which, under other circumstances, has made men immortal, was needed to put into execution an enterprise so full of difficulty and danger. Such spirits, if any, not only deserve to be free, but are fit to enjoy the largest liberty.—Trenton State Gazette.

Can a Runaway Slave Hold Property?—Are Slave Marriages Valid?

A curious and interesting law case is now before the District Court for the City and County of Philadelphia. A slave by the name of Robert Thompson ran away from Virginia about 1835 or 1836, and came to Philadelphia, where, in the course of a few years, he purchased a lot of land and built a house. In the meantime he had sent to Virginia for his wife, a free woman of color, by whom he had ten children. Before her arrival, however, Thompson contracted a marriage with a colored woman in Philadelphia. The Virginia wife on arriving and finding how things were, also married another man. Thompson and his first wife both died and the house and his property were left in possession of the second wife. Now, however, a daughter of the first, or Virginia wife had brought an action of ejectment to recover the property of her father.

The first question raised by this action was: Could a runaway slave hold property in Pennsylvania? The Court decided that he could except that the master might come and reclaim him and take possession of his property. But until proved a fugitive, and reclaimed, the colored man was to be reputed and treated as a free man. The next and more difficult question was:—Whether the cohabitation and reputation of the parties in Virginia constituted a valid marriage, and made the plaintiff in this case the legitimate child and heir of her father? The Court was rather inclined to believe the marriage valid, and the child legitimate in the eye of the law. The jury brought in a verdict for the plantiff. The question whether, upon the whole evidence, the plaintiff is entitled to recover, was reserved for the Court in Banc.

A Slave Penn in Michigan.

During the last session of Congress, it will be recollected that the Hon. Charles E. Stuart, one of our State Senators, made a proposition for the erection of a slave-penn in this State, as a punishment to Michigan for refusing to have her jails used for that purpose. But the project was so generally execrated by the independent press of the State that we supposed even the author of the infamous scheme had not the hardihood ever to recieve the subject—much less any other citizen of Michigan.

But we have been mistaken, and I we learn, equally to our surprise and regret, that the Grand jury of the United States District Court were this morning called down from their room by a special message from Judge Wilkins, and charged or recommended to take the subject of the erection of a United States prison—which, of course, means nothing more nor less than a slave-penn—into consideration. They were recommended to visit the County Jail, for the purpose of satisfying themselves that it was wholly inadequate for this purpose, and then to visit the fort two or three miles below the city, with the view of ascertaining whether it might not be converted into a prison for the use of the Government.

We learn that the character of Judge Wilkins' charge left the impression that he was in favour of the disgraceful scheme. But we hope, for his credit, and for the credit of our State, that those who heard it are mistaken. We want no slave-penns in Michigan. This is the first and we believe the only free State in the Union where such an "institution" has been proposed, and what is the necessity for it here? Does the Administration intend to make Michigan their hunting ground for fugitive slaves, in contempt for the sentiment of our people, or are the alien and sedition laws to be revived for the punishment of those who dare to condemn the Fugitive Slave Law, and the business of slave-catching generally?

It is to be hoped that Judge Wilkins will be able to relieve himself from the odium of being suspected to favor the infamous project. However earnestly Judge Kane may labor to convert Pennsylvania into a slave State, let not the soil of Michigan be polluted with the threatened disgrace.—Detroit Tribune.

The Cincinnati Anti-Slavery Bazaar.

Address by Lucretia Mott.

Mrs. Mott expressed regret at calling the visitors away from the well-furnished and tastefully-ornamented tables to listen to her remarks, for she felt that, since so many of the public journals were taking right ground on this question, there was little more need of speeches. The objections she once had to Bazaars—the exhorbitant prices asked, &c., —had mostly ceased since they had fallen into the hands of anti-slavery ladies, who had always a delicate sense of right and justice.

Men had found it hard work to keep up the religious organizations of the day, and many philosophers were forced to acknowledge that the lecture-room was a better school of morality than the church; and unless the church took hold of these reforms, it would dwindle to naught. The people had asked for bread and would not be content with a stone.

Of all religious organizations, the Friends only had been the constant advocates of freedom. They had, from the first, put their souls in the soul's stead of the oppressed, and remembered those in bonds as bound with them.

All injustice recoiled upon itself. Every wrong had its revenge, and the use made of the Bible in retarding freedom had reacted upon the Church, and caused the love of many to wax cold.

She then related several instances showing the effect of individual, persevering effort in this cause. Exertions in the cause of right and truth always found a response from the common people. There was no little depravity in the human heart, and so much that was good, that its instincts and responses were always right.

Ministers had at one time desecrated themselves to be the tools of the Slave Power, and had used the Bible for it; but they did not need the Bible to establish this right—they found it within them. Now, however, ministers had learned to make a better use of it, and had begun to proclaim liberty throughout the land to all the inhabitants thereof.

She concluded by denouncing all union with slaveholders, either politically, religiously or commercially.

Speech by Lucy Stone Blackwell.

Mrs. Blackwell thought that the friends of the Anti-Slavery cause had reason to congratulate themselves on the growth and spread of their principles. Not long ago the cause was despised and rejected of men, but now there was given to it the hearing ear and the understanding heart.

But of one thing she wished particularly to speak. A great Ohio statesman had proclaimed, in his manly tones, "No Slavery outside the slave States," and with this the friends of freedom seemed to be content; but she felt there was danger in it—that we were working only to free ourselves, and leave all that black sweltering mass of millions to groan on in their chains. This seemed like the voice of those who desired only to save themselves, but she felt that it was necessary to strike at the root of the evil. She spoke of pro-slavery papers in this city, and said they were such because they had pro-slavery readers. It was the fault of the community. Editors could write anti-slavery articles just as well as pro-slavery ones if it would only pay. Slavery controlled the man, and through him commerce, the press and the people.

The Slave Power was not only founded on a disregard of all right, but such also was its practice. It cared no more for the rights of the white man than of the negro. This was proved by the respect shown for the rights of white men in Kansas, by slaveholding Missourians, and by the regard for the personal liberty of Passmore Williamson, by a pro-slavery Judge.

She appealed to mothers, to teach their children not how to sell the most cotton, silk or hardware, but how to maintain their own rights, and establish those of their fellow men.

She then spoke of the purposes of the Anti-Slavery Bazaar. It was to give them the sinews of war—to enable them to scatter Anti-Slavery books, tracts and newspapers through the land, and to send the living speaker. She wanted young women to engage in circulating these, and young men, clerks, to take them, and put a tract in every box or package of goods they send away; so that when they were opened in Indiana or elsewhere, the country merchant would be called to "remember the Slave."

She concluded by inviting the young men and women to come to her table and leave their names as tract distributors.

The attendance last evening was quite large. In the crowd we observed the tall form of Governor Chase.

Retribution.

Every day history, in the life of the world, teaches the absolute and unfailing certainty of retribution. Who can forget his sensation at the solemn exclamation of Dame Elspeth, when at the very height of the Antiquary, in which she bears so important a part, she breaks out in answer to the visions of her evil deeds: "If I have sinned, have I not suffered? Has not my house been burnt with my bairn in the cradle? Have not my boats been wrecked, when a' other weathered the storm?" The wizard of the north designed, perhaps, certainly painted, that sorrowful picture of crime and retribution; but a greater master is furnishing a similar one, on a more extended scale, for the warning and instruction of his children, in our day.

Who has not read in the papers, the harrowing account of the terrible suffering, and the frightful havoc of death among the inhabitants, the families, the parents and children of the city of Norfolk? how the burning fever of the tropics, so fatal and so terrible, has come among them in the frightfulest aspect of the king of terrors, to fill their habitations and hearts with dismay, and their homes with despair. They are crying out in anguish for help in their distress. In the midst of their deep woe and misery, they are stretching out their hands for sympathy and compassion. Who are the people of Norfolk who are so wofully afflicted? The whole land is vocal with the story of their sufferings, which are so terrible and fatal, that they seem to have been inflicted by an angry judge. In such a light we are led to ask, What have they done to be afflicted? Have they sinned? and are they now paying the penalty for their cruelty? What says their history?

About one year ago, there lived in the same city of Norfolk, a kind and compassionate woman, by the name of Margaret Douglas, who, though brought up to endure slavery, yet felt a sympathy for the ignorance and suffering of its victims. On one occasion she ventured to guide the light of knowledge into the minds of a few of them; and again, when one of her forbidden pupils was stricken with a mental disease, she compassionated her as a Christian, as you shall learn from her own words, as follows:

"Quietly and alone, my daughter and myself sat up, night after night, with the suffering child, and endeavored to smooth her pathway to the grave. She seemed far more happy and contented when we were beside her, and we therefore gave to her all the time we could possibly spare. On the night she died we sat with her until a late hour, and, as we were leaving her, she said, in broken accents:—'I thank you, Mrs. Douglas and Miss Rosa, for all you have done for me; you have taught me to pray and to read my Bible, but I shall never read it again; you must pray for me before you go.' We did so, and left her quite in a slumber, from which she awoke only, we trust, in heaven. We took charge of the funeral arrangements, had her corpse neatly attired for its last repose, and saw that everything was done decently and in order. Six of her schoolmates, selected previously by herself, dressed in white, acted as pallbearers at the funeral, and were followed by the rest of the school, 1 in a close carriage bringing up the rest of the procession. Yes, I followed to the grave the remains of a poor little negro child, and as this was a stretch of humanity that the people of Norfolk could neither appreciate nor understand, I suppose I may trace to it the beginning of their future persecutions which resulted finally in the descent upon my establishment by the officers of the law."

The result of these angelic deeds was the dreary and loathsome prison. The people of Norfolk, who now, from the depths of misfortune and suffering, implore the aid and sympathy of the whole country, are the same who condemned the kind and compassionate Mrs. Douglas to the prison, for the same Christian acts which they are now asking to be done for themselves. Let not the dark shadow on their characters serve to restrict the coals of fire that are being heaped on their heads in the form of charity, compassion and aid, but may the survivors and witnesses in this revolution in the wheel of fortune be warned by these events of the "ways of God to men."—Dedham Gazette.

Slavery Defended from the Bible.

[Among those who participated in the debate which recently occurred in the General Synod of the Reformed Dutch Church, upon the question of admitting the North Carolina Classis to membership therein, there were several "men of the pulpit" who, in the words of Whittier,

"Sought out, for Slavery's hour of need,
Some fitting text of sacred Writ,
Giving to Heaven the credit of a deed
Which shames the nether pit;"

but of the whole number no one so well deserves the palm as he whose speech was thus reported in The Tribune.—EDS. Standard.]

The Rev. S. B. Howe, of New Brunswick, then commenced an argument to show that slavery was not sinful. Commencing with the sixth chapter of Timothy, he enlarged upon the first five verses at great length. He was quite certain that "servants" in that chapter meant slaves. He said that sufficient importance had not been attached to the strength of the expression which was, "as many slaves as are under the yoke." It was quite possible, he said, that there was some false teachers in the early days of Christianity, who asserted that because no Jew was permitted to be a slave for life, so ought no Christian; the Apostle in his remarks to believing slaveholders, did not command them to liberate their slave. The reverend gentleman then turned his attention to Abraham, who, he said, was a slaveholder, and, indeed, at one time owned 318 slaves. Still, God made the covenant with him—that covenant which, alienated by the Jews in the crucifixion of Christ, had descended to the visible Church of which they were a portion. Christ had pictured the happiness of heaven as consisting in lying in Abraham's bosom, and he hoped that he might lie in the bosom of that slaveholder. In the early days of Christianity, slaves, when they belong to Pagan masters, were taught the obligations of the word of God to serve their masters. If their masters were Christians, they were obliged to furnish master's testimony to their fidelity before they could be baptized. The tenth commandment was then quoted to prove that men servants and maid servants stood on precisely the same footing as other chattels enumerated in that commandment, viz., wives, oxen and asses. This, he said, forbade not only depriving a man of property which the law of the land secured to him, but even the secret thought of so doing. This struck communism and socialism down into the dust It taught us that there were rights of property, that there were masters, and that there were slaves. This distinction of property lay at the foundation of civilization. Christ had not sent forth spiritual knight errants to convert the world with force and bloodshed; that was left to Mohammed. The next argument he derived from the ceremonial law. The Israelites were commanded to eat the Passover with their servants—"every man's servant that is bought with his money"—after they had circumcised them. This law was given, too, when they had been but a year in the wilderness, were poor, and probably had no slaves. It was singular thus to see the provisions which God had made for future slavery. The objection that the new dispensation had abolished all this was of no avail, since Christ had, in many instances, held fellowship with slaveholders. He cited the parable of the unmerciful servant, the unprofitable servant, and the story of the centurion. The apostles followed his example. Mr. How then brought up the cases of two fugitive slaves—the well-known and often-quoted case of Onesimus and that of Hagar. The angel of the Lord—he said the original read "the angel Jehovah"—commanded her to go back to Sarah, her mistress. Slavery was a penal effect of the fall, and would be done away by the gradual spread of the gospel. If it were abolished to-morrow, it would only let loose a multitude of ignorant men to follow their wicked desires. Noah brought the same wicked temper out of the ark which he carried into it. It was said that the golden rule would abolish slavery, but to do that it must be changed so as to read, "Whatsoever others would that ye should do to them, do ye even so to them." How would this apply to a juryman and a murderer? The influence of the gospel was seen in the conduct of the Christian emperor, Constantine, who abolished the punishment of slaves with death by crucifixion, and made their manumission easy, when before it was difficult and expensive. The speaker showed that the influence of the gospel is the same now, by quoting from The Southern Presbyterian Review, which advocated the instruction and elevation of slaves—and this in South Carolina. If it be sinful to hold church fellowship with the churches of this Classis, it was equally so to hold civil connection with them, and they must dissolve the Union; and what American desired this? Mr. How proceeded to depict the horrors of the civil war which would follow a dissolution of the Union.—Anti Slavery Standard.

PETITION.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of Canada in Provincial Parliament assembled.

The Petition of the Undersigned Members of the First Colored Calvinistic Baptist Church of Toronto,

HUMBLY SHEWETH:

That by Indenture of Bargain and Sale dated the tenth day of February, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and forty-five, made between the Honorable Peter McGill, of the city of Montreal, Esquire, of the first part, and Wm. Henderson Edwoods, of the city of Toronto, Hair Dresser, Newton Carey, of the same place, Barber, William Henry Harris, of the same place, Shopkeeper, and Thomas Williams, of the same place, Tanner, of the second part, a true copy of which said Indenture is hereunto annexed, a certain lot in Toronto aforesaid was conveyed to the said William Henderson Edwoods, Newton Carey, William Henry Harris, and Thomas Williams, in trust, and for the purposes in the said Indenture more particularly set forth and declared, to which your Petitioners crave leave to refer

That certain of the provisos contained in the said trust deed have been taken advantage of by the said Trustees, who have thereunder assumed the right to interfere with the finances of the said Church, a practice which is utterly opposed to the recognised order and discipline of the said Church, such matters being thereby vested wholly in the Deacons thereof.

That the said Trustees have also on several occasions and by several ways deprived your Petitioners of the full and free use and occupation of their place of worship erected and built upon the said lot and being in a large measure independent of and not responsible to your Petitioners in their associate capacity, have in many ways sought to annoy your Petitioners, and deprive them of their rights under the said Trust Deed.

That the mode of electing Trustees pointed out by the said Trust Deed, is quite at variance with the recognised course and practice of Churches holding the same form of Church government with your Petitioners in these respects, to wit:—That Trustees appointed by virtue thereof, hold office for life, no matter what their conduct in the execution of the said Trusts may be, or whether they continue members of the said Church or not, and that the said Church has no power to fill a vacancy in the said Trusteeship, unless two or more of the said Trustees should at the same time die, resign, or leave the Country, not to return, circumstances which, in the nature of things, are not likely ever to occur, and moreover, a large portion of the members of the said Church are, by the said Trust Deed, deprived of the right of voting in the election of Trustees, should an opportunity ever be afforded for that right being exercised.

Your Petitioners, however, believe that all difficulty in the management of the said Church property under the said deed, would be entirely got rid of, were the members of the said Church, (of whom your Petitioners form a very large proportion) permitted to elect the said Trustees annually from among themselves.

Your Petitioners therefore humbly pray that your Honorable House would be pleased to pass an Act for the relief of your Petitioners in the premises permitting the members of the said First Colored Calvinist Baptist Church or a majority thereof, to remove the Trustees above named from their said office and to appoint annually, from among themselves such and so many Trustees, the whole number not being more than seven nor fewer than three, in whom shall be vested the said Church property, for the use of your said Petitioners and others, the members of the said First Colored Calvinist Baptist Church, as aforesaid

And your Petitioners will ever pray.

THOMAS WILLIAMS,
And 97 others.

Dated at Toronto, 10th February, A. D., 1855.

The above petition speaks for itself. It is the one, the counter of which we published by request of the Church, in our issue of the 3rd inst. We regret that we did not have this one, at hand, at that time, so that we could have published them together, &c. but better late than never, and as we then promised to take further notice of those petty officials, and so-called, Trustees, &c., we take occasion to do so now. By a comparison of the petitions, it will be seen, how base are the majority of those would-be Trustees, and the heartless falsifiers who joined them in their criminal work. It will also be seen how the Legislature of the country was imposed upon and deceived, and induced not to do the Church JUSTICE, because of a faction of libelers, who may yet be prosecuted for their hypocritical wickedness! It is but proper that the rightful authorities of the country should keep their eyes upon those subtle tyrants, and disturbers of the public peace, and especially the members of the Legislature; and we hope that the Association, of which, the Church is a member, will do what it can to sustain the brethren, who have been turned out of doors, by the despotism of such a miserable set of persons—unworthy of a respectable place, in any religious community, from the Mormons—DOWNWARDS.

It is but a matter of justice to the Church, and its Minister, to say, that those usurpers of Church authority, have been despotic and abusive, in various ways, which are not set forth in the above petition. For some ten years, they have kept the Church, nearly the whole time "in hot water," as every body in Toronto, who is acquainted with its history knows. They treated very badly Elder Washington Christian, their former Pastor, a minister of intellectual and spiritual ability—one owned of God, and greatly blessed in his effort, and beloved by all, except those disgraceful petitioners, who knew him, as the ministry of Toronto, and the Churches of the Association, &c., will bear testimony. Though the old man purchased the ground, and built the Meeting-house for them, by his efforts, yet that same party turned him out of his pulpit, and treated him so unkindly, that he died virtually from a broken heart. His beloved widow received but little better treatment to-day, from them. They have bound over to keep the peace, several Christian brethren, who are devoted, harmless and quiet men. They ordered the minister not to take into the pulpit—ministers of other religious denominations, WITHOUT THEIR PERMISSIONS! They have broken up the meeting of the Church, and closed the door against the Body, &c.; indeed, time would fail us to enumerate their usurpation and wickedness. The Church, for peace sake, has left their property, and gone elsewhere, to worship God. It deserves the sympathy and co-operation of those, who fear God, and love religious liberty! We were in Toronto, last week, and spent a pleasant time, with the brethren, in their humble place of worship. We preached for them on Lord's-Day, and administered the Lord's Supper. The congregation was large, and God met with, and blessed us. "The place was none else than the house of God and the very gate of Heaven to our souls!"

Jesus did fix his church's plan,
And made it truly free,—
Though 'tis wrong'd by sinful man,
Its triumphs we shall see!

"EDITOR OF THE PROVINCIAL FREEMAN:—DEAR SIR—Could you open a column or two regularly for "Experiences" gathered up from every class of Fugitives. A truthful story of birth, early training, education, observations, good times, hard times, separations, relations, father, mother, brother, sisters, escape, present view of slavery, &c.

"Every story judiciously prepared, would be read; and they would not be "Uncle Tom's Cabin's—no "Reminiscences of Kentucky Life"—but simple facts, with day and date, names, and places. Such facts, gathered from a field of 50,000 Fugitives, would reach cords that have hardly been touched yet in this agitation.

"You must bear in mind that thousands of our people have never seen a slave; and simple home facts that must be occurring every day, told in a truthful, simple way, will reach the hearts of the people. The hearts as well as the minds must be reached."

We select the above paragraphs out of a business letter from our esteemed friend, Z. Coleman of Michigan. The subject about which he writes, we are deeply interested in, and for years have desired to gather it up and lay it before the public in the form of a small volume—being satisfied that it would greatly promote the cause of the slave. But pecuniary inability has prevented us from doing so. And since our connection with the Provincial Freeman, we have failed to do so, for the same, and other reasons. We have not time to prepare for the press the facts that we have received, and might gather, on the subject, and there are but few of our people who are able or willing to do it without pay. The columns of the Freeman are open, free of charge, if they or any one else will prepare such experiences for publication through them.—Should they not do so, our friends must be patient with us, and we will gratify their desire as soon as possible. Our friends must not forget that we can give no more of our time to the Freeman, than we are giving at present, until they shall make it pay us for our humble service. We are poor, and have quite a family to support. We get no pay for what we do for the paper, and, besides, we have two feeble churches, on our hands, to which we try every Sabbath, to preach the gospel, &c., and for which, we get no pecuniary reward—no, not even a dollar from any of the many Missionary Societies, and our own people are unable to pay. We can do no more; when we can, we will. We are sorry that the literary department of the Provincial Freeman is so poor, but what more can be expected from him, who is so feeble, and works very hard at manual labour, for a living? We should like to give our whole time to the religious and intellectual culture of our people, and to promote the general interest of our race, and will do so, friends, whenever you shall say so!

We perfectly agree with Bro. Coleman that "the hearts of the people" must be "reached," "as well as the minds." There is but little hope of a proper reformation among the people, and especially on the subject of slavery, until the emotions of the mind shall be aroused by facts, which emotions shall carry the will in a proper direction. That "facts" that will aid in such a work may be "gathered from a field of 50,000 Fugitives" there can be no doubt. Not the mere "Reminiscences of Kentucky life," but facts awful in suffering, but sublime in labours for Liberty! Such facts should be given to the "people" who "have never seen" an abject, the outraged, and a broken-hearted "slave." They should hear from his wrecked manhood! If God will help us, they shall hear!

Not alone of birth and home,
Beyond the Northern shore;
But of deeds that made them roam,
And separations sore.
And how nature's truthful voice,
From earliest childhood sought,
To urge them to the happy choice,
Which them to freedom brought.

☞ The Publishing Agent of the Freeman wants to hear from its Agents. The winter is at hand, and the Office must have money. Friends, don't forget the Provincial Freeman, if you do, it must be wrecked, and the cause of our people in this country ruined! Will not every reader try and do something for us? Don't forget, we want new subscribers, and money we must have!

☞ We have received No. 1 & 2, vol. i., of "Hunter's MEDICAL SPECIALIST:" a very neat monthly, published at New York. Our information respecting the medical profession is very limited indeed; but we feel quite sure from what we know of Dr. Hunter, and the diseases of which he treats—the nature and cure of which he purposes to discuss, &c., that his paper will be invaluable. The price of the Journal is One Dollar per annum. We hope it may find a home in every family, in this country and the United States, that may not be well posted on PULMONARY complaints!

☞ STILL ONWARD!—Our beautiful little village, Dresden, is still going a-head. We see that our old friend, G. W. Webster, has enlarged and beautified his store-house, and filled it with a fresh supply of useful and needed articles for the coming winter. It will pay to see his new stock, and much more to buy of him. And our worthy fellow-citizen, Wm. H. Wilson, is hard at it, fitting out the community with boots and shoes for the present mud and coming cold, such as it never had before, as to fit and durability. He cased us up, the other day, knee high, in leather, for the winter's campaign. He will bless the feet and legs of his friends, who do'nt forget him. We see that Doctor Ray and his family have arrived within a few days, and are fixing themselves to spend and be spent in our thriving village. His father too is pitching his tent among us for coming life. And we hear of other families, who are coming to swell our numbers, among whom, is our enterprising and highly esteemed brother, George De Baptiste, Esq. Amen! So may it be!

☞ We have been appointed by the First Baptist Church of Dawn, as its Agent, to make an appeal to the public, on its behalf, and to collect funds to enable it to build a house of worship in the village of Dresden, C. W. We have but little time to attend to such matters, but we dare not refuse to do what we can. There are those, who have the means, and will rejoice to aid the Church in such a work, no doubt. But we deem it proper, to say, that no people are more deserving of help, in such a case, than the Baptists of Dawn. They are few, and poor. They have bought a lot for the house. Their prospect brightens every day, and they will be of great service to this and coming generations. Few Churches have been more exemplary than this Church. We look forward with pleasure to its future usefulness. It must have a house of worship! Reader, what can and will you do to help us? I am requested to say, by the Church, to the Sisters of sewing circles, that boxes of goods, such as they make up, can be converted into the building, and will be acceptable. The house is to be a neat and plain one, and will cost about Two Hundred Pounds. Any thing for the above object, may be directed to Elder Wm. P. Newman, Dresden, Canada West.

☞ We call attention to the advertisement of Mr. George Kerr's extensive Hardware Establishment, in another column.

☞ A letter on hand from M. A. Shadd which will appear in our next, detailing success in Philadelphia, altogether gratifying.

☞ Miss. E. T. Greenfield, the (Black Swan,) contemplates making a professional tour to the West Indies. We hope she may meet with the abundant success which she so eminently deserves. More will be said of this lady in future. S.

The London Times contains letters from China, received by the overland mail.

A large and heavy armed piratical fleet had been destroyed to the northward, by the British war brig 'Bittern.' Five vessels were destroyed.

The crops of New Congess had arrived, for which exorbitant prices were asked.

The crop of Canton silk was very short. Congo tea had advanced during the month of August.

Four vessels had sailed for America.

Hong Kong dates to the 15th.

Arrival of the Canada.

HALIFAX, Nov. 22.

The Canada arrived, news unimportant, consols 88⅞ to 89.

Halifax, to-day.

The Canada arrived at one o'clock this afternoon. Her advices from Liverpool are to the 10th inst. The Canada will be due at Boston at a late hour on Friday night.

The excitement in Great Brittain in regard to the United States had completely cooled off, and nothing of a belligerent nature had transpired during the week.

From the seat of war there is no news of importance beyond some unreliable rumors of battles near Perekop and Simperopol, which were generally disbelieved.

At the latest moment the report was in circulation that Mickeloff had been bombarded by the allies.

Peace rumors were abundant; but they were generally without foundation.

Strenuous efforts were making to bring Sweeden into the western alliance.

Unfriendly relations were arising between Great Britain and Spain, respecting certain disputed claims.

BREADSTUFFS.—A general advance had taken place, and all descriptions close with active demand.

Brown, Shipley, & Co., quote Wheat 2d higher. Flour 1s, and Corn 2s. 6d. Provisions had underwent no change of moment.

There had been a further considerable advance in Sugar.

London Money Market rather easier.

Consuls closed 88¾ for money, and 89 for accounts.

NOTHING LIKE LEATHER.

IF YOU WOULD BE RICH,

Read this, and save your Penny.

GOOD morrow, friend---I'm a stranger in your borough, can you inform me where I can get a pair of good boots made?"

"Yes, sir, I can; just go to T. W. WILSON'S, King St. East, Chatham, next to Smith's Grocery; that's the place; he'll accommodate you most satisfactorily."

"Well, how is your judgment in regard to the quality of boots and shoes?"

"Most excellent—I'm an old boot and shoe maker; many are the days that I've drawn the cords."

"Where did you say I could find him?"

"Why, the next door to Mr. Andrew Smith's Grocery, corner of King and William Streets, East,—any person can tell you."

"Will you conduct me there?"

"I will with pleasure; for I know him to be, from experience, one of the best manufacturers of BOOTS AND SHOES in town. His stock is of his own manufacture, and he has always on hand a superior quality for gentlemen's wear. He's also very particular in getting up his work; so I'm confident he can't fail to give reasonable satisfaction to those who favor him with their patronage."

"There are some boot makers whose work is beautiful to the eye, but plaguy pinching to the feet; and I have lumps upon each instep, which in foul weather give me excruciating pain."

"Ah, yes, too much have I suffered by fetters from the boot moulders hands; but he's not one of them; he endeavours to make a sys'ematic fit, measuring from joint to heel, and from lump to toe—closely observing the most minute protuberance, if there be any upon the feet; and he seldom fails to make his boots set as easy thereon as a glove upon a lady's tender finger. Besides, he always keeps a superior stock on hand; perhaps you might obtain a pair upon the instant, that would fit your feet and please the eye."

"Then I must try him."

"Try him, of course, and you'll save at each end of your bargain. First—you'll buy cheaper—secondly, your boots will wear you longer."

"Come, let's go."

"I'm ready—Are you a cash man?"

"I am; for he who pays cash clips the discount of credit, and secures it in his own pocket."

"Then that's the place, for his motto reads"—

Ask of me no trust, when you come to buy;
Ask of me no trust, for you I must deny;
Ask of me no trust, it hath destroyed many;
Ask of me no trust, I cannot grant you any;
Ask of me no trust, but with your cash rally;
Ask of me no trust, nor with my pocket daily.

FORGERY.

The Counterfeit Radway's Ready Relief in Canada.

THE LIVES OF THE PEOPLE IN DANGER.

THE public are cautioned against purchasing a counterfeit of Radway's Ready Relief, which is now circulating through the Canadas.—We are informed that parties at Hamilton, C.W. have been selling a spurious article of our Ready Relief, for the genuine to dealers. This is not only a fraud upon us, but is a most wicked imposition on the public. The wretch that will knowingly lend himself to so vile and treacherous a trick, for the gain of a few extra sixpences, is unsafe to deal with, and should be shunned by all respectable dealers, for if a few sixpences will induce him to rob the distressed sufferer of hope and health and to place the invalid's life in danger, he would not scruple to deceive his best customers.

Dealers who wish the genuine, purchase only of established credit, not of irresponsible pedlars or travelling adventurers and impostors.

Dealers who have R. R. R. offered to them below our regular price, may rely upon the same being a counterfeit preparation. We never sell R. R. R. in large quantities for less than 10 per cent. from our regular gross price. Dealers who purchase the counterfeit and offer the same for sale, render themselves liable to prosecution.

All of our travellers and authorized Agents have a power of Attorney signed by us, authorizing them in our name, to transact our business.

The following are our only Agents in Hamilton, C. W. T. BICKLE & SON; HAMILTON, KNEESHAW & CO., In Toronto, LYMAN. BROTHERS, & CO., are our general agents—we also sell to SIMPSON & CO.

A MORE "IMPORTANT NOTICE!"

American Tract Society—Slavery.

THE Independent of New York, in an article in that paper, of the 15th March, being one of a continuation of articles regarding the "American Tract Society," has this sentence:—"For thirty years, one of the greatest institutions of Evangelical Christendom, has been testifying in effect, that the institution of Slavery, the buying and selling of human beings, and the profession of the slave-trader, are less offensive to God, less contary to the Gospel, less perilous to the souls of men, than the practice of dancing. It has attempted to exhibit and authenticate, on the widest scale, an administration of Christianity, in which there shall be no more syllable of rebuke for crimes that shock the morals sense of Christendom. The influence of the Tract Society has tended to make the Southern churches more timid and cowed in the presence of the imperious slave-trading interest. As a consequence of this policy—partly, but not exclusively—behold the SOUTHERN APOSTACY!"

In December 1844, a report of "The "Committee of the Synod of New York and New Jersey, on the subject of the mutilations of books by the American Tract Society," was published; and in that report, the mutilations and omissions in the editions published, by that Society, of D'Aubigne's History of the Great Reformation, were pointed out—besides, there are the omissions and expurgations in other books published, as to the vile sin of Slavery, and the substitution of sentences other than the original.

The notice by me entitled, "Publications," referable to these matters, has been widely circulated, and a Canadian public are again reminded of their duty.

A HISTORY OF ALL NATIONS,

FROM THE

EARLIEST PERIODS TO THE PRESENT TIME;

OR

UNIVERSAL HISTORY:

IN WHICH THE HISTORY OF EVERY NATION, ANCIENT AND MODERN, IS SEPARATELY GIVEN.

Illustrated by 70 Stylographic Maps and 700 Engravings

By S. G. GOODRICH,

AUTHOR OF 'PICTORIAL GEOGRAPHY OF THE WORLD,' 'PARLEY'S CABINET LIBRARY,' 'PARLEY'S TALES,' &c.

Complete in one imperial octavo volume, of more than twelve hundred pages of double column letter-press; and upwards of seven hundred elegant illustrations.

It is believed that a Universal History, suitable in form, extent, and arrangement, to the wants of the mass of American readers, has never been presented to the public. For this reason, and in compliance with numerous suggestions from those entitled to respect, the author has undertaken the formidable task of supplying one of a popular character and for general use.

A reader of history should always have in mind two things—viz., the place where, and the time when, an event happened. In the present work therefore, the geography of each country whose history is carefully given; and to aid the reader, seventy stylographic maps have been added. Careful attention, also, has been paid to Chronology, so that, at every page and every chapter, the reader may find the dates of the events which are described.

In order to avoid the confusion which inevitably arises from embracing the whole history of mankind in a general chronological view, the author has adopted an ethnographic arrangement, by which he presents each nation separately. The advantages of this plan for a popular treatise, are obvious. The mind of the reader is not overtasked by a boundless extent of view, nor bewildered by a perplexing multiplicity of objects. On the contrary, everything is clear and distinct. Events, instead of being forced out of their true place and connection, are presented in easy and natural succession, thus imparting to the work the attraction and interest of continuous narrative. Another advantage of the plan is, that it not merely admits, but invites descriptive details, illustrative anecdotes, personal adventures and sketches of character, all of which serve not only to give life and effect to the pages of the historian, but to impart the colors of truth and reality to the pictures he may present.

While the work thus presents a separate and distinct history, and also exhibits the present state of every nation, ancient and modern, including the recent revolutions in Europe, still, for the purpose of showing how nations have acted upon or influenced the destinies of one another, General Views are given, at suitable periods, presenting the great movement of mankind, as one family, in its onward march from the past to the present time.

It is proper to state, that while the author promises only a compilation, yet he has endeavored to choose from the highest and best authorities and while the work is offered as a popular treatise, it still seeks to present the practical results of philosophic investigation; and finally, that while justice is rendered to the classic ages, the whole work is written in the spirit of modern civilization—which places justice above power, prefers peace to war, and regards the Christian, rather than the soldier, as the true hero of our race.

The work is illustrated with 700 engravings, designed rather for instruction than mere embellishment. Portraits, costumes, monuments, coins, medals, portraits, weapons of war, vehicles for travelling, dress, religious rites and the manners and customs of ancient and modern times.

With a view to render it more valuable, especially in the family library, an ample chronological table is given, with a full index—containing upwards of four thousand historical and geographical names;—thus rendering it a CYCLOPEDIA OF HISTORY, and UNIVERSAL GAZETTEER, available, for daily and familiar use, as a book of reference.

The work is in one imperial octavo volume, containing 1200 royal 8vo. pages, in double columns, and embraces as much printed matter as six or eight octavo volumes of ordinary extent.

AND IS BROUGHT DOWN TO THE YEAR 1854.

The following is a notice of it from the Boston Post:

"Of the excellence and character of the compilation we have heretofore spoken, and can, therefore, do little more at present than to repeat ourselves. Not only the philosophy of history, but geology, geography, and astronomy, are discussed, at reasonable length, in the introductory chapters. Then comes a very interesting essay on physical and political geography, followed by a paper on the antediluvian and patriarchal ages. To this succeeds the history of Asia and Africa, from the earliest period to the present time. Then succeeds, in order, the history of Europe and America. In every respect this "Universal History" is to be commended as a useful compilation. For students, as well as for the general reader, it must prove highly attractive. The illustrations answer every purpose, and really illustrate the text. Although called a "history," and thereby ranked by some people with many a drowsy volume, we can assure our readers that they will scarcely find a more readable book, than this under notice. The compiler is neither dull nor tedious. He does his work briefly and clearly, and, in addition to the historical facts, gives many curious anecdotes and statements regarding the manners, customs, social life, religion, government, costume, sports, amusements and employments, of the different nations of the earth. We advise people to look at the publication. It is just the thing for the general reader, being neither deep, nor verbose, nor stupid. It is a compilation made with taste and skill, as well as with patience and labor."

Certificates.

Without professing myself a believer in all varied departments of Phrenology, a Science to which I have given little or no attention, I yet have pleasure in acknowledging that, myself and family having submitted to an examination at the request of Mr. Persons, he gave us, and that with great readiness, as far as I can judge, a very truthful description of our characters. Conscious defects were pointed out. Those faculties which needed cultivation, and those that had been improved and developed by particular pursuits of studies were named, in cases where he could not have known what these were.

As Mr. P. professes his belief in the atonement of Christ as the only ground of acceptance with God, and in the necessity of the influences of the Holy Spirit to regenerate the soul and to enable us to improve what is defective in us, and in the hope that it may be his object to become practically acquainted with these truths himself, and to cause their influences to be felt in his teachings, I trust that he will meet with success in his classes.

This is to certify that the Bearer, Wm. Persons, is deeply imbued with the spirit and doctrines of Phrenology, has attended my lectures, and read my works; that he has a first rate natural talent for prosecuting this science, that I strongly recommend him, while examining his head, and before I knew him, to follow this science as a permanent profession; that I recommend him to the public as talented and worthy of patronage, and think him calculated to do good.

Exhibitions and Lectures.

THE Undersigned proposes exhibiting the Diorama of Uncle Tom's Cabin, in the principal Cities, Towns, and Villages in the Northern States and Canada: and to accompany them with abundant evidence as to the truthfulness of the facts assumed by the author, in the work known by that name, which will include the recital of some most mysterious and thrilling incidents in the history of his own family. The flight of his parents for freedom—their capture, and return to slavery and their second flight; a history of their lost boys, who were stolen and sold into slavery—the death of one of them, and the redemption of the other by the purchase of himself; and the final purchase for the enormous sum of five thousand dollars.

The paintings, comprising the scenes of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," are the production of an eminent French artist, and show as large as life, and represent the most prominent scenes and characters in the work.

In order to render our labors more effectual and create more general interest and benefit, we propose the following arrangements, viz:—To give one half of the receipts to any Church or Society, or regularly appointed committee by the public, who will provide a place, secure an audience, and defray the expenses incident to the meeting.

An arrangement by which every Church or Society in the country may replenish their funds, aid their pastors, or whatever other benevolent object that commends itself to public patronage.

Let such then who would help the cause, help themselves, and help us in our feeble endeavours to enlist the public ear to the cries of bleeding humanity; go at once to work, communicate immediately with us preparatory to an exhibition.

We shall not however confine ourselves to that deplorable and humiliating aspect of the colored man's case, repesented in that work.

But we promise at no distant date, a new programme of very different scenes, representing not only an entirely original, but a far more hopeful aspect of the black man, than has ever been presented to the American public.

It is neither egotism, nor vet flattery, in us to say that this mode of giving instruction possesses the double merit of engaging those two most important faculties that man possesses—the mind and the sight at the same time, and making an ineffacable impression. It is not as being necessarily dependent and degraded, then that we shall confine our exhibitions of his character

There have been places where, and times when, the black man of modern times has proven himself the patriot, the statesman, and the warrior. As such, then, let him be known to the world, that it may acknowledge it, and to our youth, that they may imitate their example and copy their virtues

We suffer more perhaps, from false representation, than all other ills put together.

Those amongst us who have acted the part of patriot are represented to be vicious and ungovernable: and those whom the most direful and crushing prejudices have debarred from the opportunities for higher developments are represented as submissive willing underlings. Generation after generation are stamped with the same falsimpressions, and learn to assume it on the one h

Poetry.

IS IT COME?

BY FRANCIS BROWN.

Is it come? they said, on the banks of the Nile,
Who long—ed for the world's long-promised day,
And saw but the Sphinx's changeless toil
With the desert's sands and the granite grey.
From pyramid, temple, and treasure dead
We vainly ask for her wisdom's plan;
They tell of the slave and tyrant's dread—
Yet there was hope when that day began.

The Chaldee came with his starry lore,
That built up Babylon's crown and creed;
And bricks were stamped on the Tigris' shore
With signs which our sages scarce can read.
From Ninus' temple, and Nimrod's tower,
The rule of the old East's empire spread—
Unreasoning faith and unquestioned power—
But still—Is it come?—the watcher said.

The light of the Persian's worshipped flame
On ancient bon fage its splendor threw;
And once on the West a sunrise came,
When Greece to her freedom's trust was true.
With dreams to the utmost ages dear,
With human gods and godlike men,
No marvel the far-off day seemed near
To eyes that looked through her laurels then.

The Roman conquered, and revelled, too,
Till wealth, and honor, and power were gone;
And deeper and Europe's darkness grew,
As wave after wave the Goth came on.
The gown was learning, the sword was law,
The people served in the oxen's stead;
But ever some gleam the watcher saw,
And evermore—Is it come?—they said.

Poet and Seer that question caught
Above the din of life's fears and frets:
It marched with letters—it toiled with thought,
Through schools and creeds which the earth forgets:
And statesmen trifle, and priests deceive,
And trader's barter our world away;
Yet hearts to that golden promise cleave,
And still at times—Is it come? they say.

The days of the nations bear no trace
Of all the sunshine so far foretold;
The cannon speaks in the teacher's place—
The age is weary with work and gold;
And high hopes wither, and memories wane—
On hearths and altars the fires are dead;
But that brave faith hath not lived in vain;
And this is all our watcher said.

The Ten Commandments.

Have thou no other gods than me;
Unto no image bow thy knee;
Take not the name of God in vain;
Do not the Sabbath day profane;
Honor thy father and mother too;
And see that thou no murder do;
From vile adultry keep thee clean;
And steal not, though thy state be mean;
Bear no false witness—shun the blot;
Want in thy neighbor's covet not.
Write these thy laws, Lord, in my heart,
And let me not from them depart.

Miscellaneous.

Be Kind to the Poor.

The sky is overcast with clouds. Like a dark funeral veil they shut out the blue firmness from our vision, while the bright sunshine we are not permitted to enjoy. 'Tis a winter scene: the air is piercing cold, the wind gives a mournful howl as it sweeps through the decayed trees and naked branches, but amid the moans of the tempest and the gloom that surrounds us we we hear an angel voice whispering, "Be kind to the poor."

Along the pavement stalks a woman alone and apparently unknown—her garments so scanty as to afford but little protection from the piercing atmosphere—her step is weak and tottering, her form bent, and, as we approach her, we discover a quivering lip, a tearful eye, and a care worn countenance that speaks of "long, long weary days" and nights of agony—that speak to us of bliss blasted hopes and joys forever fled. Perhaps she is a wife whose husband has forgotten the vow he made at the altar long years ago, when the rose tint of health was on her cheek and joy sparkled in her eye. Many a true and loving heart has been tortured by neglect or crushed by indifference and cruelty. Many a wife has passed hours of weary watchfulness while the reckless thoughtless husband worshiped at the shrine of Bacchus. Oh! what agony to the wife! What madness in the husband! And then perhaps that husband was kind, gentle and affectionate, and when she thought she was about to quaff from the goblet of happiness; death—cruel death, dashed it from her lips. Perhaps those whom she loved only, dearly, devotedly loved. Those whom she watched over in infancy with a mother's anxious care have added, sickened and died; and she has been compelled to consign them to the cold, cold grave. Oh! the ills of life are numerous, and what she has been called upon to endure we cannot say, but we feel that she has grief and sorrow in her heart, and her melancholy countenance says to us in language not easily misunderstood: "Be kind to the poor."

We meet often a little pale faced girl; there is innocence in her mild blue eyes, seen through tears wrung from them by want and suffering, and there is something in her face, sorrowful as it is, that tells us that the heart, though sad, is pure.

Poor little one how much of your grief and sorrow and suffering might be removed and how comfortable and happy might you be made if those upon whom fortune has smiled would but learn to be "kind to the poor."

Ye preachers of the gospel! ye who profess to be the followers of the "Meek and lowly Jesus," why do you not walk more closely in his footsteps? why waste your time discussing the difference that may exist in the different denominations, and condemning what in others may seem to you to be imperfections. Pursue a different course—teach your hearers to love one another, that it is angelic to forgive the erring and draw them back to virtue, that they can win the smiles of a kind and merciful God by being "kind to the poor;" and that a gentle word is sometimes more highly prized than rubies; for when it falls upon the ear of one who felt himself friendless and alone; it melts the heart, however hardened it may be. Bright visions of the past dance before him and forgetting all present woes and cares he blesses the lips that utter it.

Reader if you would become rich in happiness, be gentle and affectionate to your fellow being, and above all, remember those who are in want and adversity—minister to the wants of the suffering—dry the tear of the afflicted, for angels smile when a heart is found that can sympathise with, and "be kind to the poor."

No Gentleman.

"Agh! Phew!"

He was very well dressed, nevertheless. Glossy hat, curly hair under it, white collar, new overcoat, neat little boots. And he stepped straight, and quick, and gracefully; and altogether, as far as could be judged, from my view in reverse—for I did not see his face—good-looking and gentlemanly.

Still, it was easy to see that no woman would kiss him if she could help it; that he was not a thorough gentleman. If he had been, that filthy cloud would not have driven steaming round his left ear, defiling the fresh morning breeze on which it rode, straight into my face. I should have been saved some choking and sputtering, much disgust, and the trouble of writing these remarks.

A gentleman? Very likely—in your intentions. But that is not enough. To intend to do the right thing is all very well, and not so universal as it should be; but that alone does not make the gentleman. He intends to do it, and does it, and does it in the right way, too. A gentleman I might define, always does the right thing in the right way.

But you did the wrong thing in the wrong way. I shall not tell you silly and sickly it is to smoke. But I shall take the liberty of informing you that you should do it—if at all—in some smoking-room, or bar-room, or other private or public beer-garden, and not out in God's sunlight, nor in the public's face and eyes. Who wants to sniff up the second-hand breath, mixed with cigar-smoke, that has made the tour of your lungs and nostrils, and that has a variety of used up materials from the inside of your body with it? Is is doing the right thing to impose the use of your execretions upon a stranger in that manner?

Kiss him? Perhaps he has a wife. Poor thing! His own wife, it is supposed must sometimes kiss him, or be kissed by him. Such a kiss! A suck of stale cigar-smoke, rather. Horrible!

Thomas Smellbad, Esquire, is so unfortunate as to have a "bad breath." It is almost "death at ten paces." One might as well stand and talk face to face with a pestilence. Perhaps he might excusably use cigars. So he might asafœtida. But he might not blow it into people's faces in the public street, even then. And as for you, young man, with your good health, good digestion, good teeth, you are inexcusable. If you impregnate your person and your clothes with the stink—no milder word will serve—of stale tobacco-smoke, you are a fool. But as long as you go about puffing the same into the eyes and noses of others, you are no Gentleman.—Life Illustrated.

The Three Jolly Husbands.

Three jolly husbands. out in the country, by the names of Tim Watson, Joe Brown, and Bill Walker, sat late one evening drinking at the village tavern until being pretty well corned, they agreed that each one, on returning home, should do the first thing that his wife told him, in default of which he should the next morning pay the bill. They then seperated for the night, engaging to meet the next morning and give an honest account of their proceedings at home, so far as they related to the bill.

The next morning, Walker and Brown were at their, posts, but it was some time before Watson made his appearance. Walker began first:

'When I entered my house, the candle was out, and the fire giving but a glimmering light, I came near walking into a pot of batter that the pancakes were to be made of in the morning. My wife, who was dreadfully out of humor, said to me sarcastically:

'Bill, do put your foot in the batter.'

'Just as you say, Maggy,' said I, and without the least hesitation, I put my foot in the pot of batter and went to bed.'

Next, Joe Brown told his story:

'My wife had already retired in our usual sleeping room which adjoined the kitchen, and the door of which was ajar; not being able to navigate perfectly, you know I made a dreadful clattering among the household furnitare, and my wife, in no very pleasant tone, bawled out.'

'Do break the porridge pot.'

'No sooner said than done. I seized hold of the handle of the pot, and striking it against the chimney-jam, broke it in a thousand pieces. After this exploit I retired to rest, and got a curtain lecture til I fell asleep.'

It was now Tim Watson's turn to give an account of himself, which he did with a very long face, as follows:

'My wife gave me the most unlucky command in the world, for as I was blundering up stairs in the dark, she cried out:

'Now, Tim, do break your neck.'

'I'll be cuss'd if I do, Kate,' said I, gathering myself up the best way I could, 'no, I'd sooner foot the bill.'

'And so, landlord,' continued Tim,' there's the cash for you. But by jingo, this is the last time I'll ever risk five dollars on the command of my wife.

Mechanics.

St. Paul was a mechanic—a maker of tents from goats' hair; and in the lecturer's opinion, he was a model mechanic. He was not only a thorough workman at his trade, but was a scholar, a perfect master, not only of his native Hebrew, but of three foreign tongues—a knowledge of which he obtained by close application to study during his leasure hours, while serving his apprenticeship. It was a custom among the Jews to teach their sons some trade—a custom not confined to the poorest classes, but also practised by the wealthy: and it was a common proverb among them, that if a father did not teach his son a mechanical occupation, he taught him to steal. This custom was a wise one; and if the fathers of the present day would imitate their example, their wrinkled cheeks would not so often blush for the helplessness, and not unfrequently criminal conduct of their offspring. Even if a father intended his son for one of the professions, it would be an incalculable benefit to the son to instruct him in some branch of mechanism. His education would not only be more complete and healthy, but he might at some future time, in case of failure in his profession, find his trade very convenient as a means of earning his bread; and he must necessarily be more competent in mechanical from his professional education. An educated mechanic was a model machine, while an uneducated mechanic was merely a machine working under another man's brain. Let the rich and the proud no longer look upon mechanism as degrading to him who adopts a branch of it as his calling. It is a noble calling—as noble as the indolence and inactivity of wealth is ignoble.—Rev. Dr. Adams.

☞ If a young man wants to engage in business that will insure him, in middle life, the greatest amount of leisure time, there is nothing more sure than farming. If he has an independent turn of mind, let him be a farmer. If he wants to engage in a healthy occupation, let him till the soil. In short, if he would be independent, let him get a spot of earth, keep within his means, shun the lawyer, be temperate to avoid the doctor, be honest that he may have a clear conscience, improve the soil so as to leave the world better than he found it, and then if he cannot live happily and die content, there is no hope for him.

Electric Fish.

A number of new fishes have been received from Old Calabar (the Western coast of Africa,) the most interesting of which is an electric fish. Its electric properties are made use of by the natives as a remedy for their sick children. The fish is put into a vessel of water, and the child made to play with it; or the child is put into a tub of water in which several fish are placed. It is interesting to find a popular scientific remedy anticipated by the savages.

Effects of Under-Draining.

To the Editor of the N. Y. Daily Times.

Dear Sir:—If I cannot say that I am personally acquainted with the subject of the following short narrative, I can give you reliable assurances, that in it the benefits arising from a system of thorough underdraining are not exaggerated.

Some years ago the son of an English farmer came to the United States, and let himself as a farm laborer in this State, on the following conditions: commencing work at the first of September, he was to work ten hours a day for three years, and to receive in payment a deed of a field containing twelve acres—securing himself by an agreement, by which his employer was put under bond of $2,000 to fulfil his part of the contract; also, during these three years, he was to have the control of the field, to work it at his own expencee, and to give his employer, one half the proceeds. The field lay under the south side of a hill, was of dark heavy clay, resting on a bluish-colored solid clay subsoil, and for many years previous, had not been known to yield any thing but a yellowish, hard, stinted vegetation. The farmer thought the young man was a simpleton, and that he, himself, was most wise and fortunate; but the former, nothing daunted by this opinion, which he was not unconscious that the latter entertained of him, immediately hired a set of laborers, and set them to work in the field trenching as earnestly as it was well possible for men to labor. In the morning and evening, before and after having worked his ten hours as per agreement, he worked with them, and continued to work in this way until about the middle of the following November, he had finished the laying of nearly 5,000 yards of good tile underdrains He then had the field plowed deep and thoroughly, and the earth thrown up as much as possible into ridges, and thus let it remain during the winter. Next spring he had the land again plowed as deep as before, then cross; and thoroughly pulverized with a heavy harrow, then sowed it with oats and clover. The yield was excellent—nothing to be compared to it had ever before been seen upon that land. Next year it gave two crops of clover, of a rich dark green, and exceedingly heavy and luxuriant; and the year following, after being manured at an expense of some $7 an acre, nine acres of the field yielded 936 bushels of corn, and 20 waggon loads of pumkins; while from the remaining three acres were taken 300 bushels of potatoes—the return of this crop being upwards of $1,200. The time had now come for the field to fall into the young man's possession, and the farmer unhesitatingly offered him $1,500 to relinquish his right to it; and when this was unhesitatingly refused, he offered $2,000, which was accepted.

The young man's account stood thus:

Half proceeds of oats and straw, first year,	$175 00
Half value of sheep pasturage, first year,	25 00
Half of first crop of clover, first year,	112 50
Half of second crop of clover, increased, second year,	125 00
Half sheep pasturage, second year,	15 00
Half crops of corn, pumpkins and potatoes, third year,	600 00
Recieved from farmer for relinquishment of right,	2 000 00
	$3,052 50

Account Dr.

To underdraining labor & tiles $725 00
" labor and manure, 3 seasons, 175 00
" labor given to farmer, $10 per month, 30 months, 676 00
	1,776 00
Balance in his favour,	$1,676 50

Our farmers must learn that knowledge and enterprise and preseverance, exercised in their business, will not only add a hundred fold to their own income, but will also confer more permanent benefits upon our country than these qualities exercised in the same degree in any other business whatever.

From the Thocold Gazette, Extra.

American Sunday School Union—American Tract Society—Slavery.

Extract Letter to the Editor of the Woodstock Gazette.

I observe in your tri weekly of the 15th inst, a letter signed "M. T. Runnels, Missionary A. S. S. U. for Oxford County," regarding my advertisement against Slavery and the American Sunday School Union of Philadelphia. That letter bears evident marks of the writer not having been in the habit of "taking things coolly;" and also very strong indications of a different spirit from what is to be expected from a Missionary of a Religious Society, though such as to show the signs of "impudence, ignorance and assumption" which those of a certain class shew, whom we often see in Canada from the neighbouring Republic. It is to be regretted by every loyal and true Canadian, and every "Old Countryman," that hitherto so little effort has been made not only to advertise "such vermin," but to learn and show the people of Canada that, generally, the principles under the assumed name of "religion" which are circulated in flimsy and very superficial publications—whether in periodicals or in books—should not have that currency in Canada, whereby other more valuable and reliable books may be excluded.

The periodicals and books issued by, and the objects of, the American Sunday School Union, of 316 Chesnut street, Philadelphia, are thoroughly to impregnate the youth of their country (namely, the United States) with a system of religious learning suited to their political government and to the exclusive plan they have in view. That plan is founded entirely on sinful silence, and suppression, hypocrisy and insincerity, for—

1. "The American S. S. Union cannot produce any publication among its many books and periodicals on religious works, against the sin, evil and curse of the United States, namely—American Slavery; and I challenge your correspondent, and all those connected with that S. S. Union, to show by reliable proofs, by reference to their books and periodicals, that any sentences or principles are enunciated in their books and periodicals to teach the old or the young, regarding that horrible curse and evil of Slavery, that "sum of all villianies," as designated by the venerated John Wesley, and in more lengthened and expressive language by other eminent divines, both English and American.

The same kind of books, &c., printed at 316 Chesnut street, Philadelphia, which are composed and adapted for the teaching and instruction in the United States of the young and the aged, (exclusive of the poor slave and his descendants of "Afric's sunny clime,") these books, and these only, from the A B C primers, reading books, spelling books, hymn books (including the Fourth of July hymn,) dictionaries, libraries, tracts, Sunday School Journal, Penny Gazette, &c., are those which your correspondent, and his confreres, are paid for and encouraged to sell and circulate and give away, amongst the people of Canada; and, as it appears, amongst the good people of the County of Oxford in an especial manner.

2. But the evil is not confined to the above. It is objected, moreover, and a most serious objection too, and one which every sound thinking man and woman in Canada should consider, that these books, &c., from the A B C upwards, are based on Republican principles and arrangement, and the object and aim, by them, along with religious knowledge, is to Republicanize (or Americanize) the population of any country where circulated. That American S. S. Union has in its publications declared (and likely the same is very proper as applicable to their country, the United States) in these words—"This mess of mind is to be Americanized—to be made acquainted with the law of God, and our system of government, and thus prepared to become useful citizens." That is to be accomplished by the indoctrinating of the young and the old, by and through such means and ways, with the said books and tracts, hymns and all, and the assistance in Canada of the paid missionaries of the American S. S. Union. Our own considerate and wise government at different times in Canada have provided for a system of week-day education in our Common and Grammar Schools, under the supervision of proper Superintendents; but on Sunday—if your correspondent's notion is to be entertained—the system is to be one of a Republican or American tendency, under the garb of religion. (See my letter to the Rev. E. Patterson, Chairman of the Board of Instruction for the County of Perth, and my letter to the editor of the Stratford Examiner, in that paper of the 13th inst.)

3 The American Tract Society, of 150 Nassau street, New York, of such noted repute for having yielded to the Slave power—though it does not establish Sunday Schools, or have a school system—is the twin sister or brother of the American S. S. Union. Every considerate information regarding it will be found in the "Unanimous Remonstrance" referred to below; but the latest publication, by which both these Societies are fairly empaled before a discerning religious and anti-religious public, is—"Report of the New York General Association on the relation of the Benevolent Societies to Slavery—unanimously adopted 26th August, 1855." It will be found in the Independent, of New York, of 6th September, 1855, (a capital paper.) Likely it will be separately published, when I promise that it will be made known in the County of Oxford.

My Proofs—I refer to such as are handy and cheap, and which should be obtained and circulated throughout the County of Oxford by all lovers of religious freedom, and of "a pure-gospel taught"—(1.) Unanimous Remonstrance of the Fourth Congregational Church, Hartford, Connecticut—Hartford, 1845; pp. 34. Of this pamphlet I have circulated nearly one thousand copies in Canada; and it will be found with the Beeves and Township Clerks of each Municipality, and with most ministers of religion (list of 1854) and postmasters, in the County of Oxford. I refer to the resolutions on pages 7 and 8, and the general tenor of the Remonstrance, for though directed chiefly against the American Tract Society, it embraces the same grounds against the American S. S. Union, as these resolutions and relative statements show. (2.) American Slavery a formidable Obstacle to the Conversion of the World, by William Goodell. New York, 48 Beekman street, 1854; pp. 24. This publication shows the position in which religious bodies should view the slave question, and which the American S. S. Union entirely avoids. (3.) American Slavery in connection with American Christianity—New York, 48 Beekman street, 1854; pp. 60. At page 57 will be found some portion of the character enjoyed by the American S. S. Union; but it contains also besides other things) a most valuable sermon by the Rev. Dr. Perkins, of the Nestorian Mission, Persia, which every educated minister of religion and layman in the County of Oxford and everywhere should attentively peruse. "I hold that American Slavery is the greatest human obstacle to the spread and triumphs of Christianity that exists at the present period."—p. 10. So says Dr. Perkins, and truly; but the American S. S. Union does not say so! (4.) Report of the New York General Association,—above referred to. (5.) Tracts No. 1, Separation from Sin and Sinners; No. 3, on Slavery; and No. 14, Fellowship with Slavery. These are in the set of Tracts published by that trustworthy society at Cincinnati, Ohio,—"The American Reform Tract and Book Society,"—and are useful in showing the position and bearings of the slave question as regards religious bodies; but all mention of the slave's rights and the sin and evil done to him and before God, the American S. S. Union avoids. [6.] Key to Uncle Tom's Cabin—Part 4, chapters 1, 2, and 3. How any man or woman "in their senses," after perusing this "Key" and the parts I refer to, would recognize as pure and of good intent and reputation any religious society, accused as in the American S. S. Union, in the country of its origin, [and where the statements regarding it dare not be denied,] is rather inexplicable, or as the Irishman has it, "bangs Banagher."

[COPY]
Stratford, 20th Aug., 1855.

Rev. Ephraim Patterson, Chairman of the County Board of Public Instruction for the County of Perth, Stratford.

Rev. Sir,—Permit me to call your attention as Chairman of the County Board of Public Instruction for the County of Perth, to the editorial notices which have appeared in the newspapers of this place, viz: the Stratford Examiner and Stratford Beacon, of date 9th and 10th inst., commendatory of the American Sunday School Union of Philadelphia and New York, U. S., and of the school books introduced by the agents of that School Union into this County, as well as into other Counties of Canada, and I am sorry to say that these recommendations have proceeded also from ministers of religion, who are under sworn allegiance to our Queen and Government.

These books which appertain to the instruction of the young, [commencing with the A B C class, and the graduatory system of tuition,] and the hymn books, contain expressions inimical to our monarchial institutions, liberal enough and in so many respects superior to the principles of other governments. The tuition from these books will be therefore likely subversive of that tuition which is given to the young by our Common and other School Books. I subjoin a few sentences of expressions referred to, as I have but few publications in my possession; also, I subjoin a list of School Books, &c., —but scattered throughout the various sets of Sunday School and Family Libraries, their periodicals and school books [all of which, with other publications, are now forced upon the notice of a Canadian people,] I have no doubt, will be found many expressions very unsuitable to our country. A Republican basis is in the whole system of teaching in the books and in the periodicals of the American S. S. Union,—and, as a British subject, I am not in the way of duty, if [knowing such] I fail to represent them.

I therefore beg to call your attention to the above, and hope that some investigation will be made by your Board into the matter; and in the meantime I consider it my duty to transmit copies of this letter to the General Board at Toronto, as well as to his Excellency the Governor General.

Apart from the above, and the question of interference by a foreign Society under Republican Institutions, with the tuition of the youth of Canada, I have other weighty objections to the American Sunday School Union: one, for instance, is, that that Union is under the influence of the Slave Power in the Southern States, (a matter notoriously promulgated in the country where that Society has its origin,) and which Society, with some other religious Societies, such as the "American Tract Societies," of 150 Nassau street, New York, circulate books largely in Canada, chiefly, I am sorry as a British subject to say, helped on by many ministers of religion and some religious Societies in Canada, regardless of the easy opportunities of obtaining books of tuition and instruction from the religious Societies, so early instituted, in the parent countries of England, Scotland and Ireland, and establishing Depositories of such in prominent parts of Canada. I have spread some information, at considerable outlay [which I cannot regret,] with lists of publications as my proofs, throughout Canada, East and West, regarding the "American Tract Society," during the Fall of 1854 and last Winter, which I believe have come under your notice,—and I beg your attention to my notice of date 8th August inst., entitled "American Sunday School Union—Slavery,"—and every information regarding the status of this Society, as well as the American Tract Society, can be easily obtained from the United States—and where I have found resolutions by religious bodies up to the time I now write protesting against both said Societies, and the course they have adopted as to Slavery, expurgations from the books published, and their universal silence as to the sin and evil of Slavery. But this is apart from the references to the American Sunday School Union, to which this letter more immediately refers.

Begging, therefore, in the meantime, your attention to the first part of this letter.

I remain, Rev. Sir,
Your most obdt. serv't,
J. E. Linton.

Truth and its Love.

The conscience of humanity is a beautiful emblem of truth. It is ever faithful to its own instincts, hence it always speaks on behalf of the true. It is a matter of no little regret that the world is so very ignorant of the real nature of that faculty and its true office. Were it otherwise, much that passes for truth would be known only as falsehood, and those distinctions only would be made among mortals, which are righteously proper. Kith and kin would have but little to do with such distinctions. Everything, and especially rational beings, would be regarded and treated according to its or their intrinsic and moral worth. Their truth, that mental state, which constitutes a moral attribute, would occupy its own position, and have that controling influence that it is destined to have among the finite, on behalf of the infinite and itself. The disposition to represent facts as they are, would be universal. The attitude of the human will would be in opposition to the false, and in adhesion true. The Creator and creature would have their dues. The right would be right, and the wrong would be wrong. The Government of God would then be the government of man. There would be a confidence in the Society of men, more firm, than we now place in the annual seasons. No one would be at his wits end in anticipation of the weal or woe, attending the next change in human affairs. Truth would be as the sun, giving life and happiness to all around, while falsehood would be as terrible as an army with banners, and dreadful as a deadly foe.

Truth! we long thy reign to see;
Thou attribute of God:
Thy triumphs our earth will free,
From falsehood's blighting rod.

That humanity is made for such a state of society, as truth will ultimately establish, is a fact known from its constitutional love of truth itself, and its detestation of falsehood. The falsifier despises himself, much more those of his own character. However much infidelity and scepticism may endeavour to induce the thoughtless and silly to love the untrue, and though some may even fancy that they do love it, and however much also the selfish, for sinister motives, may try to sustain the false, or to make wrong right, and right wrong, or to annihilate the distinction between the true and the false, yet, the true only are loved, as humanity is not a lie! Let him know who is untrue to nature, that his own conscience hates him! Such an one is a mere speck of falsehood, standing in the midst of a Universe of truth, a Universe to which God has given millions of hands, and put in each hand a weapon to slay the traitor to truth. Whatever good opinion such an one may have of himself, or however others may smile and caress, and apparently approve him, still he is an object of universal hate—yes—heaven and earth hate him! Ah! even hell itself hates such a traitor to truth and universal happiness!

☞ We give on our first page, this week, a letter from John J. E. Linton, of Stratford, to Rev. E. Patterson, of the same place, touching the pro-slavery character of the American Sunday School Union; also, copious extracts from a letter to the Woodstock Gazetteer, which we recommend to the careful attention of our readers. We wish it were possible to copy the paper entire; but the state of our columns will not admit of it. It is very clear that the influence of the Union is most pernicious, politically and morally.

"Western Monthly Herald."

We have received the first number of Vol. I, of the "Western Monthly Herald," owned and edited by Henry Williams, jun., a colored gentleman of Cincinnati, Ohio, U. S. It is a family religious newspaper, but devoted particularly to the interest of the Colored Baptists of Ohio. Success to it!

☞ The Provincial Parliament has been prorogued till the 25th inst.

The Black Alliance of the Kent Advertiser.

The Advertiser has a cub,
His color is not Saxon;
A sort of infidelish scrub,
The  call'd him Jackson.

"Answer not a fool according to his folly," is a Divine maxim, and to it we will stick, the columns of the Kent Advertiser to the contrary notwithstanding. That journal is welcome to all the help it can get from its co-operation with infidels of the Tom Paine's philosophy, to injure the Provincial Freeman. Why does the Advertiser do so? Because, when it attacked the Freeman, it got more than it bargained for! We threw it the gauntlet, and it was afraid to take it up. We judge the Advertiser must be "hard up," or about "to go by the board," or it would not form such an alliance; and especially since it is a black one! To be called a "fanatic," and "bigot" through the columns of such a journal as the Kent Advertiser, is saying much for the piety, and to the honor of any man! It might have been otherwise, however, had such slanderous charges appeared through the columns of the Western Planet—a respectable journal,—an honor not only to its Editor and Proprietor, but also to the country—a paper appreciated by the people, as its very large circulation attests. The Advertiser ought to be sent among baboons, whenever its columns attempt to teach grammar! It might find a few pupils among them. They are a warlike tribe, upon Christian ministers and women, and very fond of fire-arms, and tobacco—hence they might learn to stock a gun, and make a cigar. Indeed!—one who makes a mistake, by the addition of ans, with pen or type—no grammarian, ha! Well, stick to it, ye gods, and we will send you to school! Mark! "He shook his head and said"—a mistake, no doubt. We guess he shook his "ears" and "brayed!"—So my good fellows be off to the Academy:—and learn—

Men do err,
And should forgive—
Christ to fear,
And how to live.

Look out for H. Garrett.

The black slaveholder, in heart, though himself a fugitive, we see, is in the field. Let the friends of liberty keep their eyes on Henry Garrett, the traitor to human freedom, and firmly oppose his selfish scheme of emancipation.

This man Garrett is sent forth to the world by Lewis Cass, of Michigan, and his compatriots of the United States, and this Country, to plead with the people, with tongue and circular, for money, to pay the thief for his stolen, so-called, property. We shall not cry to learn that Henry Garrett's old master has kidnapped him, and taken him back to "Old Virginia;" since he says in his circular: "The Slaveholder has a legal right to his Slaves." Again, "Slaves are lawfully held," and hence slaveholders are "entitled to compensation." "The Slaveholder has a civil right to his Slaves, which the Government is bound to respect, &c. But that is not all. He says, "To encourage Slaves to run away from their Masters, and to aid them in doing so, is surely to take a questionable course. Let the man of such sentiments be treated as he should be! But he is for stopping the discussion of the subject of slavery, &c He says: "If it has done any good, the fruit, by this time, ought to appear." Brethren, watch such a devilish tool of tyrants! When the slaves are bought, he wants them to "have facilities afforded them of returning to Africa." May the people deal properly with such an enemy of the colored race! The long-faced hypocrite covers up his wickedness with the name of God. Let the cry reverberate—wolf! wolf!!

Pass him Around.

We felt in duty bound to call public attention, not long since, to the begging operation of one Wm. Carter, of this place, for the purpose of guarding the public of the States against such imposition; for so doing, we have called down upon our head not only the indignation of the beggar himself, but of certain of his friends hereabouts.

Within a few days a friend from Pontiac, Michigan, has kindly informed us at length, of his operations in that vicinity, and in other parts of Michigan, showing clearly that the public should be on the look-out. He is tall, raw-boned, dark brown complexion, sinister expression of countenance, and represents himself in some places as a single man, trying to buy a sister, in others, as trying to buy himself. His wife has recently gone to him from this place. Our knowledge of him here is that of a barber, who would not shave colored men, and thoroughly pro-slavery in his tendencies. It is his expressed intention to remove to Mississippi as soon as convenient. Stop his operations for the credit of the colored people and for the good of the philanthropic.

Still They Come.

We learn from a private correspondent, at Cleveland, Ohio, that within a week or so some twenty-six "persons have passed" that "Depot of the U. G. R. R.," for our Gracious Majesty's Province.

Murder.

A man named Douglass Walker, was committed to jail in this town, for the murder of his wife Abigail Walker, on Thursday the 22nd inst. S.

The Board of Directors of the Upper Canada Religious Tract Society have lately presented to Andrew T. McCord Esq., —who, for the period of seventeen years, acted as principal Secretary to the above Society—the following valuable works; one of the best copies of the Holy Scriptures they have been able to select, from the stock of the Depository of the said Society, together, with a History of Missions, and 2 volumes of Horne's Introduction to the Critical Study and Knowledge of the Holy Scriptures. The success attending the labors of the Society, during Bro. McCord's connection with it, in the official capacity of secretary, was immense, and it is to be regretted that, through a press of business, both public and private, he has been obliged to resign an office that he so long and nobly filled.

We cut the above from the "Christian Messenger." Our great regard and Christian love for Bro. McCord, made us rejoice at the facts there announced. No man alive is more deserving of such a presentation, in our opinion, than the recipient. As a Christian workman, he has but few equals—his praise is in all the Churches. But we rejoice the more at Bro. McCord's getting out of a situation which must have been any thing but a truly pleasant one of late, to a man of his piety and love of civil liberty.

The Connection, directly or indirectly, of the Upper Canada Religious Tract Society, with a kindred Society of the United States, is very generally condemned in this country. The wicked conduct of the American Society in its expurgation of every sentiment of human freedom from its publications, must not be commented upon by us, it has been done by more able ones. The censure of it is just.

A New County.

A new County is about to be opened up soon, for settlement we hope! On no other condition should land in Canada hereafter be sold. Fifty thousand acres of land given to actual settlers would enrich Canada more than as many pounds produced by the old humdrum credit system, which was a direct encouragement to speculation, and plunder of somebody!

Many months notice should be given of any future Government sale, and advertised in one or more English, Irish, Scotch, French and German newspapers!

We want some new sinews and blood and LABOUR??

Ten thousand Boys and Girls from 12 to 16 years of age from the Union Workhouses of Great Britain, invoiced to Mr. Buchanan, Quebec, to arrive on or about the first of next May, would be bespoken at the various wharves between Quebec and Hamilton—kindly treated, well fed, well paid, and placed on the road to independence. Hundreds in Canada from these humble walks of life are now riding in their carriages and calling lands after their own names.—Old Countryman.

We recommend the above to the consideration of those over-cautious persons in the States, who, though crushed under the heel of American prejudice, and desiring to emigrate, express the fear that they could not get land to settle upon, because of the narrow limits of the country, neither work, because of the scarcity of employment. The Old Countryman is excellent authority to the contrary. S.

Fire.

On Wednesday evening last, a fire broke out in a row of buildings on the corner of Fifth and King streets, between six and seven o'clock. The fire originated in a chair factory, in the rear of L. Blackburn's Grocery. The buildings being old and dry, the flames spread with great rapidity to the adjoining buildings. The firemen were soon upon the ground, and rendered all possible aid in suppressing the flames, which, without their assistance, would have caused thousands of dollars worth of property to have been consumed. The streets were thronged with spectators, who seemed more anxious to look on than lend assistance in removing the goods of the different classes from the grasp of the burning element; however, a number of good-hearted, persevering fellows, rushed into the stores and dwellings and removed nearly all things of much value. The buildings consumed, we understand, belonged to Benjamin Barfoot, Post Master, of this place.

The following are the persons who suffered from the conflagration, J. Hooper, saddle and harness maker, John Deggs, grocer, Wm. Ryan, saloon-keeper and grocer, L. & J. Blackburn, grocers, F. G. Jones, barber, John Patterson, chair manufacturer, Wm. Wallace, Stone cutter.

The loss is estimated at £2,000. There was no insurance. S.

Correspondence.

From our Philadelphia Correspondent.

No. XII.

Philadelphia, Nov. 17, 1855.

Miss M. A. Shadd's Visit to Philadelphia—Immensely large Meeting for her benefit—The audience disappointed in not seeing Passmore Williamson, Esq.—The Black Swan, &c. &c.

At an Anti-Slavery Meeting, addressed by Miss Shadd, at the Shiloh Church, it was suggested that she had lectured on several occasions in this city, but had never had a single Dollar tendered her towards defraying her heavy travelling and other expenses; consequently, in view of her faithful services in the cause of Reform, it was unanimously voted by the house, to call a meeting expressly for her benefit, hence, the first steps being then taken, in the course of a few days a Committee of Twenty respectable ladies and gentlemen, were selected to carry into effect the proposed object, and Friday evening, 9th inst., was announced for the occasion.

It was proposed to have Anti-Slavery Speeches, Music, and Refreshments. In the meantime, while the arrangements were thus being carried into effect, Mr. Williamson was unexpectedly released. Consequently, on being visited by one of the committee, on the day following, he was told of the contemplated meeting, its object, &c., and at the same time was invited to be present. He replied that he desired not to be "lionized, or to be part in any meeting got up for that purpose." He was assured that among the colored people, on his behalf, the most intense interest was felt, and that it would be gratifying to them in the extreme simply to see him, though he should not speak or participate in the exercises. On further consultation, therefore, Mr. W. said; "you may announce that Passmore Williamson will be present." Accordingly, he was simply so announced; but on the assembling of the audience, unhappily they were disappointed in not seeing him. For some cause or other, his mind changed and he did not come.

In making this statement, however, far be it from the Committee to reflect upon Mr. W. His labors and services on behalf of the oppressed, to say nothing of the cruel outrage which has just been inflicted upon him by Judge Kane, are too well known not to be appreciated by them. He had justifiable reasons, in his own opinion, they charitably inferred for being absent. Still they were not unconscious of the fact that many would feel that his name had been used without authority, and the public duped, designedly; hence, the discomfiture of the moment can better be imagined than expressed. Two eminent speakers had engaged to speak, and the celebrated Miss Greenfield, the "Black Swan," had kindly volunteered her services, besides the ladies had Ice Cream, and other refreshments, in great abundance. Thus, at half past seven, the Sanson Street Hall was literally packed to overflowing, with a mixed audience of white and colored, all waiting impatiently for the exercises to commence.

Thus in the hour of disappointment, but for Miss Greefield's liberality and charming melodies, one can scarcely imagine to what extent confusion must have been witnessed by the audience. On no previous occasion since her extraordinary acquirements and triumphs, as a Vocalist, have the citizens of Philadelphia ever had the opportunity of hearing her sing for less than 50 cts., consequently it was quite apparent that the audience felt that they could easily get the worth of their 25 cts., notwithstanding the disappointment. So the house remained packed, observed good order, and by their frequent and hearty applause seemed highly delighted throughout the evening.

In justice to Miss Greenfield, to whom the audience, and especially the Committee and Miss. S., were so largely indebted for her admirable music, Anti-Slavery Songs, too much praise cannot be expressed. To her credit be it said, instead of singing only "too ballads," for which a handsome sum was offered, when first invited, she very magnanimously sung more than she is accustomed to do at her ordinary Concerts, evidently desiring to do her full share, not only in making the occasion interesting, but likewise, in making it as beneficial to Miss S. as possible, refusing to receive any thing for her services. Besides she engaged the services of two competent young ladies to perform on the Piano, and an excellent gentleman amateur also, all of whom cheerfully performed their parts.

In addition to the good music, brief speeches were made by Mr. McKim, Miss Shadd, Mr. Douglass, Mr. Bowers, and others. Mr. McKim, in his remarks, referred to the object of the meeting; the disappointment felt on account of Mr. Williamson's absence, the labors of Miss Shadd, in Canada, &c., strongly recommending her to the public. Miss S., though not intending before going to the meeting, to have any thing to say on the occasion, made quite an interesting speech, in which she complimented Miss Greenfield as the "Jenny Lind of America," &c.; also spoke considerably on the favourable condition and privileges of the colored people of Canada—contrasting their situation with that of the same class in the States. Mr. Bowers' remarks were strongly opposed to Emigration to Canada, or elsewhere, believing it to be the duty of the colored people to "remain here," at all hazards.

Mr. Douglass aimed to show that abolitionists fail to patronize colored men in business, &c., and reflected upon them severely.

With regard to Miss Shadd, whose good fortune it was to be the recipient of so unexpected a compliment, perhaps it may be well for the information of those unacquainted with her labors in the cause of Reform, to briefly refer to her services during the last two years, saying nothing of her usefulness as a school teacher, her exemplary character and superior intelligence before leaving this State for Canada, which in so doing, the motives of the Council, in volunteering in her behalf, will also be the better understood.

As she stands connected with the press, she is justly entitled, doubtless, to the credit of being the first colored woman on the American Continent, to Establish and Edit a weekly newspaper.

In 1853, seeing the great need of a paper among the colored people, to represent their true condition, increase their love for education, to inspire them to diligence and self-reliance in business; as well as to counteract grievances brought upon them by those who, for sinister motives, had grossly misrepresented them. Through no ordinary zeal and exertion, in March, 1854, she was ready to commence publishing the Provincial Freeman, placing this significant motto at its head: "Self reliance is the true road to Independence." She promised that the "Freeman should live one year," at all events; firmly resolving not to beg, or countenance begging on the part of others, for fugitives in Canada, &c., she took upon herself the arduous responsibility of Editress, Publishing Agent, Financier, &c., which experiment, however, naturally enough, brought multiplied trials, hardships and sacrifices, such as but few even in the unpopular cause of Anti-Slavery, have been made to feel.

In order to promote the good of the cause, and sustain the Freeman, she has not only had to forego the ordinary recreation and rest so essential to health, but not unfrequently has been obliged to take long journeys on Rail Roads and Steam Boats (some times on the burthen trains or upper deck, to save expenses,) in the most inclement weather, even when in delicate health. Sometimes without a dollar, though having regularly to meet the weekly expenses of the office. When in the office, the drudgery as well as the Editing, &c., she has been obliged to perform. Last winter, while on a Lecturing and Canvasing tour, in Indiana and Ohio, she was quite severely frosted about her face, to say nothing of the insults and injuries which she was frequently subjected to, on Railroads, &c., by insolent Conductors and others, on the score of prejudice. However, as indignant as she has felt, on account of these personal grievances, she has invariably declined publishing them, reserving the room in her paper for what she regarded as of more importance to the cause.

While on Lecturing tours, to defray her expenses, and procure aid for her enterprise, she has mainly been obliged to depend on the sale of her small book, and subscriptions to the paper, eschewing to ask favors or indicate her straitened circumstances; consequently, except in one or two instances, Public Meetings at which she has lectured, have done nothing in the way of collections, so she declares

Notwithstanding, the Freeman lived its year out, making its usual visits from week to week, with as much regularity as ordinary papers regularly established; and indeed it still continues to live, though for the last few months has been considerably embarrassed.

It is but just to state that a sister of Miss S., for a time, while she was canvasing in the west, very creditably filled her post, in the office as Editress, &c.

On the subject of Canada; the condition of the Fugitives; progress and prosperity of the Free Colored man, in Canada or the States, she is perfectly familiar; having studied these questions with absorbing interest from childhood.

Therefore, the Committee in tendering to Miss S. the proceeds of the meeting, felt assured that she was justly entitled, not only to their pecuniary aid, but also to their fullest confidence and esteem.

Adventures of a Fugitive—Can Negroes take care of themselves?

We have a case in point. A man named George, from Alabama, passed one of the stations of the U. G. R. R., a short time since, concerning whom some of the particulars are really wonderful.

George, some time since, heard of Canada as Freedom. He soon after started North, but being seized with rheumatism, he made himself known to a planter, and requested his master to send for him. He was sent for and taken home to Alabama. His master, though generally very severe, was so well pleased to get him again, that he was not flogged for escaping. George worked on very steadily, so as not to excite suspicion, until about December, 1854, when he again commenced preparing to leave. Although for six months he worked out of regular hours, he was able to accumulate only two dollars. George worked on week-days in the field, and on nights and Sundays was compelled to labor as a blacksmith, for his master. Formerly he worked as a blacksmith for the neighboring plantations, and the gentlemen would give him money for his own use; but latterly, the work for the neighbors had ceased, and his chances to accumulate, under the circumstances, became very poor indeed, especially, as he was not allowed to raise even a watermellon, or produce of any kind, to sell. But he wrought on, hoping against hope. Up to the 1st of September, 1855, his stock of money had not increased; but from a certain circumstance he resolved to start.

The reason of his so resolving then, was, that his master ordered him to iron two large wagons and a wagon body on Sundays and nights, and and also pick two hundred and fifth pounds of raw cotton each day. This ironining was to be done between the first of September and the twentieth of October, and yet he was kept in the field carrying cotton until eleven o'clock at night.

His resolution was soon taken. By highways and byways he travelled Northward, and after getting less than one hundred miles from home, stopped and worked for twenty days, at one dollar per day, to earn money with which to travel. His free papers he wrote himself, affixed to them the county-seal, (which he also manufactured of lead,) and, as they were examined at court, where he happened to be, were declared valid. We have been shown the free papers, and must say they are most ingeniously contrived. By rubbing them between his dusty and sooty hands he gave them an appearance of age, and by this means several defects escaped a rigid scrutiny. His story he invented before leaving his master, and so plausible was it, that he was permitted, in many cases, to pass without showing his papers. He is a fine looking man, valued by his master at more than $2,000. No human blood hound can disturb him now; for he is beyond their reach. Here is another living contradiction to the often repeated expression—"Niggers can't take care of themselves!"—Clev. Weekly Leader.

Important Action.

We learn from the Chicago Tribune the following recent facts in relation to the Glover rescue case, with the details of which our readers are familiar:

"There were two indictments, one against Booth, the other against Rycroft, upon the charge of aiding in the escape of the fugitive slave Glover. The defendants were tried upon these indictments before the United States District Court of Wisconsin, convicted and imprisoned.

"The prisoners were brought before the Supreme Court of Wisconsin upon a writ of habeas corpus, and were by the court discharged.

"Since then a writ of error has been issued by the Supreme Court of the United States to the Supreme Court of the State of Wisconsin. We learn the Supreme Court of the State of Wisconsin utterly denies, the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United Ssates in such a case.

"This is a direct and palpable test of the relative rights and powers of the State and Federal governments respectively.

"Of the result we do not entertain a doubt. We owe to the Supreme Court of Wisconsin the respect and reverence due to a judicial tribunal which has had the courage to avow, and will have the virtue to maintain, the fundamental principles of State Rights and Personal Liberty."

Canadian Anti-Slavery Baptist Association.

This body held its fifth anniversary at Dawn, C. W., Sept. 7 and 8. The Introductory Sermon was by W. P. Newman, from Acts 20: 24. Officers were chosen as follows:—Henry Dawson, Moderater; Samuel H. Davis, Clerk; P. J. Jackson, Treasurer; W. P. Newman, Corresponding Secretary. The body embraces seven churches, of which, however, only five were represented. The Association appointed Brn. W. P. Newman and S. H. Davis as delegates to the American Baptist Free Mission Society, to which it is auxiliary. Henry Dawson, of London, C. W., was appointed a missonary to labor among the feeble churches of the Association, and was authorized to receive collections to aid the body in its missionary work. The Corresponding Secretary was instructed to ask aid for this missionary effort from the Regular Baptist Canada Missonary Society, and from the Am. Bap. Free Mission Society. Resolutions were passed, approving the American Baptist, the Christian Messenger, and the Provincial Freeman; also, one in favor of abstinence from the use of, and traffic in ardent spirits as a beverage. The next annual meeting is to be held in Detroit, commencing on the first Friday in September, 1856, at 10 A. M. —Am. Baptist.

Valuable Testimony.

From the Manchester, N. H., Mirror, Oct. 27.

Testimony of a West India Planter to the Advantages of Free over Slave Labour.—During my tour to the White Mountains, I met with a gentleman from Barbadoes, a West India planter, by the name of Charles Pettyjohn, who gave me his experience as a planter on that Island, in the cultivation of the sugar cane, and the manufacture of sugar both by slaves and free men.

"In 1834," said he, "I came in possession of 247 slaves under the laws of England, which required the owner to feed, clothe and furnish them with medical attendance. With this number I cultivated my sugar plantation until the Emancipation Act of August 1st, 1838, when they all became free. I now hire a portion of those slaves, the best and cheapest, of course, as you hire men in the United States. The average number which I employ is 100, with which I cultivate more land, at a cheaper rate, and make more produce than I did with the 247 slaves. With my slaves I made from 100 to 180 tons of sugar yearly. With 100 free negroes, I think I do badly if I do not annually produce 250 tons."

Such is the testimony of honest intelligence upon this most important subject, and adding another to the many facts already adduced that chattel slavery not only subverts the moral and social relations of master and slave, but equally strike a blow at the pecuniary interests of both.

R. C. Stone.

A Disgraceful Story.

The following circumstances are related in the Lisbon journals: "In August, 1854, when the Brazilian steamer Tocantius touched at St. Vincent (Cape de Verdes,) the engineer, an Englishman, made an arrangement with a colored woman of the island that she should go with him as wet nurse to his daughter; she accordingly went, taking with her an infant. On her arrival at Rio de Janeiro, the account states that the Englishman sold mother and daughter as slaves. The poor woman, as soon as she discovered the fraud of which she was the victim, sent a petition to the Governor of the Cape de Verdes by a friend, the facts of which were substantiated by eye-witnesses who happened to have returned from Rio. The petition was also presented to Mr. Rendall, the British Consul at St. Vincent. It is reported that the Governor has requested the Portugues Ambassador at Rio to demand the immediate liberation of the mother and child, and also to represent the matter to the British minister at Rio, to procure the punishment of the perpetrator of so gross an outrage.

An Abolitionist Among Us.

Leonard Hipp was examined yesterday at the First District Court, on a charge preferred against him by John Ernon, who affirmed that the accused has frequently, within the last six or eight months, held conversation with his slaves and other slaves in his employ, in which he used language tending to produce discontent, excitement and insubordination among them; in consequence of which, it has since fund that the slaves alluded to have become insolent and disrespectful in their conduct towards him. After a careful examination of the above charges, the accused was sent before the Dist. Court for trial. No bail was admitted in his case.—N. O. Cour.

Strange Developments.

A correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette writes from Pittsburg, that when the case of Passmore Williamson was argued, last summer, at Bedford, on the motion to bring Williamson out on a writ of habeas corpus, three of the Judges (Messers Lowrie, Woodward and Knox) were in favor of granting the writ, and two (Messrs. Black and Lewis) opposed to it. When the Court reassembled in Philadelphia, Judge Kane and his friends had an interview with our Judges, and communicated to them the fact that the President had ordered the United States Marshal, in case the Court should direct the writ to issue, to remove Williamson from Moyamensing to a United States receiving ship, and defend him there, with United States marines and soldiers, against any force the State might send to take him. The question presented to our Judges was, whether it was prudent to risk the threatened collision? I am sorry to say that they though it was not. They had not the nerve to stand up for State Rights. Judges Lowrie and Woodward changed their opinions, and the writ of habeas corpus was not issued. The threat—for it was a threat—should have an incentive to its issue, instead of the pusillanimous course adopted; for the question of State Rights has got to be settled, and this was the opportunity needed.

☞ A clan of Southern students at College Hill, Ohio, undertook, a few nights ago, to kidnap a colored barber, a smart likely fellow of eighteen years of age, with the design of running him over the line into the State of Kentucky. The noise of the melee awakened the citizens, and a rescue was effected after a terrible fight. The miscreants engaged in the outrage made their escape.

☞ On Thursday night last four or five slaves made their escape from this city. They were house servants, and unless we are greatly mistaken, they will, before the winter is over, long to be back in their "Old Kentucky Homes."—Covington, (Ky.) Journal.

We think, then, you will be "greatly mistaken." It is hardly likely they would "long" to have a home they would risk their lives to get clear of.—Kentucky News.

☞ Two lots of fugitives passed through Alliance, Ohio, by the Under Ground Rail Road, on their way to Canada, last week. The first comprised four smart, hearty young men from Maryland, and the second three men and two women from the Old Dominion. During the progress of the last party through the State of Pennsylvania, they were set upon by a pack of Kanine hounds, but made good their escape notwithstanding. One of the fugitives received several severe cuts and bruises in defending his right to himself.

Kansas.—The Territorial Convention called by the Free State Party, for the purpose of forming a State Constitution, and applying for admission as a State into the Union had assembled and organized. Col. Lane, late of Indiana, was elected President.

Disturbances at Bath.

Last Sunday week, the Catholics attempted to hold religious services in Bath, Maine, appropriate to laying the corner-stone of a new church. A large concourse assembled to witness the exercises, which were prevented by rowdyism of the lowest sort, and violence. During the forenoon a wooden cross, which was erected, was forcibly pulled down. Early in the afternoon an American flag was raised amid the cheering of a considerable number of persons who showed themselves hostile to the exercise and the occasion. Mr. Russell, acting Mayor, pulled the flag down amid shouts of "hustle him out!" and hisses. But on his leaving it was again put up. Attempts were made to remove the corner-stone but the rowdies were prevented. The Bishop sent word to his parish that the exercises would not be held.

Father Peter McLaughlin, in an address to the public of Bath, says he and his Catholic people throw themselves upon the protection of the Protestant citizens; and he leaves it to them to say whether the corner stone of a Catholic church shall be laid or not.

Mr. Clayton's celebrated Central American treaty has gone by the board at last. Mr. Marcy has received despatches from our Legation at London, which state that the British government has closed its correspondence with us upon the Central American question, with a flat and definitive refusal to recognize the construction of the Clayton Bulwer treaty claimed for it by Mr. Clayton. Great Britain declares her determination not to abandon her Mosquito protectorate or her colony on the islands off the coast of Honduras. Of course, as the two governments have failed to agree upon the construction of the treaty, the ultimatum of each being opposed to the other, the treaty falls.—N. Y. Times.

☞ New Bedford, the richest city in the world, in proportion to its population, numbers among its heavy tax payers twenty-nine who are worth $100,000 each, four worth $200,000, a lady worth $300,000, one man who has $600,000, one worth $800,000, two worth $1,000,000, and any number that can show from $10,000 to $100,000. Most of these persons have made their money from the whaling business.—Am. Baptist.

Queen Victoria.

The present Czar is related to Queen Victoria, both of them being descended from our George I., the latter through his son, George II., and the former through his daughter Sophia. The following are the connecting links of the chain.—George II; Frederic, Prince of Wales; George III.; Edward, Duke of Kent; Victoria. Sophia, married to Frederic William, King of Prussia; Prince Augustus William of Prussia; Frederic William II.; Frederic William III.; Alexandrina, married to the late Czar; Alexander II.

Wheat From India.

The present high price of grain in Europe has given rise to a trade, the existence of which, we dare say, is little suspected by the great majority of our readers, namely, the export of wheat from India to England. We learn from successive numbers of a Calcutta mercantile publication, that the quantity of wheat shipped from that port for Great Britain during the month, ending the 7th of September, was no less than 127,884 maunds, or 22,654 quarters, at the rate of 60 lbs. to the bushel; and we understand that, at the date of the latest accounts, shipments were still going on with considerable activity, and at rates which promised a handsome profit to the exporters.—English paper.

☞ A shocking catastrophe occurred on board the English ship Abbotts Reading, of Liverpool, while lying in Valparaiso harbor, on the 12th of September last, accompanied with loss of life. The vessel, with 1,345 kegs of gunpowder, blew up.

☞ Young lady—a word in your ear—only a whisper:—Take off those thin, delicate shoes; put on thick warm ones, if they are not quite so handsome. Health is of more importance than fashionable shoes. Off with them! Save your health and your life.

IF YOU WOULD BE RICH,

Read this, and save your Penny.

GOOD morrow, friend---I'm a stranger in your borough, can you inform me where I can get a pair of good boots made?"

"Yes, sir, I can; just go to T. W. WILSON'S, King St. East, Chatham, next to Smith's Grocery; that's the place; he'll accommodate you most satisfactorily."

"Well, how is your judgment in regard to the quality of boots and shoes?"

"Most excellent—I'm an old boot and shoe maker; many are the days that I've drawn the cords."

"Where did you say I could find him?"

"Why, the next door to Mr. Andrew Smith's Grocery, corner of King and William Streets, East,—any person can tell you.'

"Will you conduct me there?"

"I will with pleasure; for I know him to be from experience, one of the best manufacturers of BOOTS AND SHOES in town. His stock is of his own manufacture, and he has always on hand a superior quality for gentlemen's wear. He's also very particular in getting up his work; so I'm confident he can't fail to give reasonable satisfaction to those who favor him with their patronage."

"There are some boot makers whose work is beautiful to the eye, but plaguy pinching to the feet; and I have lumps upon each instep, which in foul weather give me excruciating pain."

"Ah, yes, too much have I suffered by fetters from the boot moulders hands; but he's not one of them; he endeavours to make a systematic fit, measuring from joint to heel, and from lump to toe—closely observing the most minute protuberance, if there be any upon the feet; and he seldom fails to make his boots set as easy thereon as a glove upon a lady's tender finger. Besides, he always keeps a superior stock on hand; perhaps you might obtain a pair upon the instant, that would fit your feet and please the eye."

"Then I must try him."

"Try him, of course, and you'll save at each end of your bargain. First—you'll buy cheaper—secondly, your boots will wear you longer."

"Come, let's go."

"I'm ready—Are you a cash man?"

"I am; for he who pays cash clips the discount of credit, and secures it in his own pocket."

"Then that's the place, for his motto reads"—

Ask of me no trust, when you come to buy;
Ask of me no trust, for you I must deny;
Ask of me no trust, it hath destroyed many;
Ask of me no trust, I cannot grant you any;
Ask of me no trust, but with your cash rally;
Ask of me no trust, nor with my pocket dally.

FORGERY.

The Counterfeit Radway's Ready Relief in Canada.

THE LIVES OF THE PEOPLE IN DANGER.

THE public are cautioned against purchasing a counterfeit of Radway's Ready Relief, which is now circulating through the Canadas.—We are informed that parties at Hamilton, C.W. have been selling a spurious article of our Ready Relief, for the genuine to dealers. This is not only a fraud upon us, but is a most wicked imposition on the public. The wretch that will knowingly lend himself to so vile and treacherous a trick, for the gain of a few extra sixpences, is unsafe to deal with, and should be shunned by all respectable dealers, for if a few sixpences will induce him to rob the distressed sufferer of hope and health and to place the invalid's life in danger, he would not scruple to deceive his best customers.

Dealers who wish the genuine, purchase only of established credit, not of irresponsible pedlars or travelling adventurers and impostors.

Dealers who have R. R. R. offered to them below our regular price, may rely upon the same being a counterfeit preparation. We never sell R. R. R. in large quantities for less than 10 per cent. from our regular gross price. Dealers who purchase the counterfeit and offer the same for sale, render themselves liable to prosecution.

All of our travellers and authorized Agents have a power of Attorney signed by us, authorizing them in our name, to transact our business.

The following are our only Agents in Hamilton, C. W.: T. BICKLE & SON; HAMILTON, KNEESHAW & CO., In Toronto, LYMAN BROTHERS, & CO., are our general agents—we also sell to SIMPSON & CO.

A MORE "IMPORTANT NOTICE!"

American Tract Society—Slavery.

THE Independent of New York, in an article in that paper, of the 15th March, being one of a continuation of articles regarding the "American Tract Society," has this sentence:—"For thirty years, one of the greatest institutions of Evangelical Christendom, has been testifying in effect, that the institution of slavery, the buying and selling of human beings, and the profession of the slave-trader, are less offensive to God, less contary to the Gospel, less pernicious to the souls of men, than the practice of dancing. It has attempted to exhibit and authenticate, on the widest scale, an administration of Christianity, in which there shall be no more syllable of rebuke for crimes that shock the morals sense of Christendom. The influence of the Tract Society has tended to make the Southern churches more timid and cowed in the presence of the imperious slave-trading interest. As a consequence of this policy—partial, but not exclusively—behold the [illegible] Apostacy!"

In December 1811, a report of "The Committee of the Synod of New York and New Jersey, on the subject of the mutilations of books by the American Tract Society," was published; and in that report, the mutilations and omissions in the editions published, by that Society, of D'Aubigne's History of the Great Reformation, were pointed out—besides, there are the omissions and expurgations in other books published, as to the vile sin of Slavery, and the substitution of sentences other than the original.

The notice by me entitled, "Publications," referable to these matters, has been widely circulated, and a Canadian public are again reminded of their duty.

Stratford, C. W., March 20, 1855. 8

A HISTORY OF ALL NATIONS,

FROM THE

EARLIEST PERIODS TO THE PRESENT TIME;

OR

UNIVERSAL HISTORY:

IN WHICH THE HISTORY OF EVERY NATION, ANCIENT AND MODERN, IS SEPARATELY GIVEN.

Illustrated by 70 Stylographic Maps and 700 Engravings

By S. G. GOODRICH,

AUTHOR OF 'PICTORIAL GEOGRAPHY OF THE WORLD,' 'PARLEY'S CABINET LIBRARY,' 'PARLEY'S TALES,' &c.

Complete in one imperial octavo volume, of more than twelve hundred pages of double column letter press; and upwards of seven hundred elegant illustrations.

It is believed that a Universal History, suitable in form, extent, and arrangement to the wants of the mass of American readers, has never been presented to the public. For this reason, and in compliance with numerous suggestions from those entitled to respect, the author has undertaken the formidable task of supplying, to a popular character and for general use.

A reader of history should always have in mind two things—viz., the place where, and the time when, an event happened. In the present work therefore, the geography of each country whose history is carefully given; and to aid the reader seventy stylographic maps have been added. Great attention, also, has been paid to [illegible] so that, at every page and every [illegible] the reader may find the dates of the events which are described.

In order to avoid the confusion which inevitably arises from embracing the whole history of mankind in a general chronological view, the author has adopted an ethnographic arrangement, by which [illegible] The advantages of this plan for a popular treatise, are obvious. The mind of the reader is not overtasked by a boundless extent of view, nor bewildered by a perplexing multiplicity of objects. On the contrary, everything is clear and distinct. Events, instead of being forced out of their true place and connection, are presented in easy and natural succession, thus imparting to the work the attraction and interest of continuous narrative. Another advantage of the plan is, that it not merely admits, but invites descriptive details, illustrative anecdotes, personal adventures and sketches of character, all of which serve not only to give life and effect to the pages of the historian, but to impart the colors of truth and reality to the pictures he may present.

While the work thus presents a separate and distinct history, and also exhibits the present state of [illegible] ancient and modern, including the recent revolutions in Europe, still, for the purpose of showing how nations have acted upon or influenced the destinies of one another, General Views are given, at suitable periods, presenting the great movement of mankind, as one family, in its onward march from the past to the present time.

It is proper to state, that while the author promises only a compilation, yet he has endeavored to choose from the highest and best authorities; and while the work is offered as a popular treatise, it will seek to present the practical results of philosophic investigation; and finally, that while justice is rendered to the classic ages, the whole work is written in the spirit of modern civilization—which places justice above power, prefers peace to war, and regards the Christian, rather than the soldier, as the true hero of our race.

[illegible] signed rather for instruction than mere embellishment. By setting views of cities, monuments, coins, medals, portraits, weapons of war, vehicles for travelling, dress, religious rites and the manners and customs of ancient and modern times.

With a view to render it more valuable, especially in the family library, an ample chronological table is given, with a full index—containing upwards of four thousand historical and geographical names;—thus rendering it a Cyclopedia of History, and Universal Gazetteer, available, for daily and familiar use, as a book of reference.

[illegible] imperial, and [illegible] containing 1200 royal 8vo. pages, in double columns, and embraces as much printed matter as six or eight octavo volumes of ordinary extent.

AND IS BROUGHT DOWN TO THE YEAR 1854.

The following is a notice of it from the Boston Post.

"Of the excellence and character of the compilation [illegible] heretofore spoken, and can, therefore only add that the present [illegible] is a decided improvement upon the former ones. The Natural Sciences, such as [illegible] geology, geography, astronomy, are discussed, at reasonable length, in the introductory chapters. Then comes a very interesting essay on physical and political geography, followed by a paper on the antediluvian and patriarchal ages. To this succeeds the history of Asia and Africa, from the earliest period to the present time. The [illegible] ces, in short, the history of Europe and America. In every point of view this history is to be commended as a useful compilation. For students, as well as for the general reader, it must prove highly attractive. The illustrations answer every purpose, and really illustrate the text. Although called a "history," and thereby ranked by some people with many a drowsy volume, we can assure our readers that they will scarcely find a more readable book, than this under notice. The compiler is neither dull nor tedious. He does his work briefly and clearly, and, in addition to the historical facts, gives many curious anecdotes and statements regarding the manners, customs, social life, religion, government, costume, sports, amusements and employments, of the different nations of the earth. We advise people to look at the publication. It is just the thing for the general reader, being neither deep, nor verbose, nor stupid. It is a compilation made with taste and skill, as well as with patience and labor."

Certificates.

Without professing myself a believer in all varied departments of Phrenology, a Science to which I have given little or no attention, I yet have pleasure in acknowledging that, myself and family having submitted to an examination at the request of Mr. Persons, he gave us, and that with great readiness, as far as I can judge, a very truthful description of our characters. Conscious defects were pointed out. Those faculties which needed cultivation, and those that had been improved and developed by particular pursuits of study were pointed out, in cases where he could not have known what these were.

As Mr. P. professes his belief in the atonement of Christ as the only ground of acceptance with God, and in the necessity of the influences of the Holy Spirit to regenerate the soul and to enable us to improve what is defective in us, and in the hope that it may be his object to become practically acquainted with these truths himself, and to cause their influence to be felt in his teachings, I trust that he will meet with success in his classes.

JOHN ALEXANDER.

BUFFALO, Feb. 21st 1853.

This is to certify that Mr. Wm. Persons, is deeply imbued with the spirit and doctrines of Phrenology, has attended my lectures, and read my works; that he has a first rate natural talent for prosecuting this science; that I strongly recommend him, while examining his head, and before I knew him, to follow this science as a permanent profession; that I recommend him to the public as talented and worthy of patronage, and think him calculated to do good.

Exhibitions and Lectures.

THE Undersigned proposes exhibiting the Diorama of Uncle Tom's Cabin, in the principal Cities Towns, and Villages in the Northern States and Canada: and to accompany them with abundant evidence as to the truthfulness of the facts assumed by the author, in the work known by that name, which will include the recital of some most mysterious and thrilling incidents in the history of his own family. The flight of his parents for freedom—their capture, and return to slavery and their second flight; a history of their lost boys, who were stolen and sold into slavery—the death of one of them, and the redemption of the other by the purchase of himself; and the final purchase for the enormous sum of five thousand dollars.

The paintings, comprising the scenes of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," are the production of an eminent French artist, and show as large as life, and represent the most prominent scenes and characters in the work.

In order to render our labors more effectual and create more general interest and benefit, we propose the following arrangements, viz:—To give one half of the receipts to any Church or Society, or regularly appointed committee by the public, who will provide a place, secure an audience, and defray the expenses incident to the meeting.

An arrangement by which every Church or Society in the country may replenish their funds, and their pastors, or whatever other benevolent object that commends itself to public patronage.

Let such then who would help the cause, help themselves, and help us in our feeble endeavours to enlist the public ear to the cries of bleeding humanity; go at once to work, communicate immediately with us preparatory to an exhibition.

We shall not however confine ourselves to that deplorable and humiliating aspect of the colored man's case, represented in that work.

But we promise at no distant date, a new programme of very different scenes, representing not only an entirely original, but a far more hopeful aspect of the black man, than has ever been presented to the American public.

It is neither egotism, nor yet flattery, in us to say that this mode of giving instruction possesses the double merit of engaging those two most important faculties that man possesses—the mind and the sight at the same time, and making an ineffaceable impression. It is not as being necessarily dependent and degraded, then that, we shall confine our exhibitions of his character.

There have been places where, and times when the black man of modern times has proven himself the patriot, the statesman, and the warrior. As such, then, let him be known to the world, that it may acknowledge it, and to our youth that they may imitate their example and [illegible] their virtues.

We suffer more perhaps, from false representation, than all other ills put together.

Those amongst us who have acted the part of patriot are represented to be vicious and ungoverned; and those who have risen above all crushing prejudices have deserted from the opportunities for higher development are represented as submissive willing underlings. Generation after generation are stamped with the same false impressions, and learn to assume it on the one hand, and [illegible] on the other.

We are arranging a new and a very extensive programme of Distinguished Colored Men and the incidents with which they have been connected and acquired themselves honorably—such as Attucks, "the first martyr of the Revolution," the "Colored Regiments at the Battle of New Orleans," who [illegible] and most prominent "Black leaders" who freed the first spot discovered by Columbus, that was first desecrated to [illegible]—Hispanola—now Hayti.

[illegible] favored to make the arrangements [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] interest

Humor and Wit.

Put this in your Pocket Books.

Young men who, to dress well, eat well, drink well, and ride well, run in debt for these enjoyments, can apply this to themselves. Richelieu was a great Cardinal, and Bulwer occasionally speaks the truth:

"You have outrun your fortune;
I blame you not, that you would be a beggar,
Each to his taste! But I do charge you, sir,
That, being beggar'd, you would coin false moneys
Out of that crucible called debt. To live
On means not yours—be brave in silk and laces—
Gallant in steeds—splendid in banquets—all
Not yours—ungiven—unherited—unpaid for
This is to be a trickster, and to filch
Men's art and labor, which to them is wealth,
Life, daily bread; quiting all scores with 'Friends
You're troublesome!' Why this—forgive me—
Is what—when done with a less dainty grace,
Plain folks call—theft!"

Story of Dumas.

An inquisitive foreigner, who had been introduced to Alexander Dumas, commenced questioning him upon his origin. "You are a quadroon, Monsieur Dumas?" began the inquisitor. "I am, sir," replied Dumas, quietly, who never makes any attempt to conceal his pedigree. "And your father?" pursued his inquiring friend. "Was a mulatto," responded Monte Christo. "And your grandfather?" "Was a negro," replied Dumas, beginning to lose his patience. "Ah! and may I inquire what your great-grandfather was?" "An ape, sir!" exploded Dumas, with a fierce gesture that made his tormenter recoil; "an ape, sir—my pedigree commences where yours ends!"

Dumas is not like some colored men of less importance we know of, who conceal their African "pedigree," and thereby hope to change the "spots." The great Frenchman adopts a better policy.

A Good Shot.—A physician visiting a patient who lived at a great distance, was asked by the sick man if he did not find it very inconvenient to come so far.

"Not at all, sir," replied the son of Esculapius, "for, having another patient in the next street, I can kill two birds with one stone."

"Can you, sir?" replied the invalid; "then you are too good a shot for me," and the M. D. got his walking ticket.

Civilization.—A person who resided for some time on the coast of Africa was asked if he thought it possible to civilize the natives. "As a proof of the possibility of it," said he, "I have known some negroes that thought as little of a lie or an oath as an European."

A Nigger Liebig.—"I say Sambo, does ye know what makes the corn grow so fast when you put the manure on it?"—"No, I don't hardly." "Now I'll jist tell ye. When the corn begans to smell the manure, it don't like the 'fumery, so it hurries out of the ground, and sits up as high as possible, so as not so breaff the bad air."

☞ Keep your dog away from me, said a dandy to a butcher boy. 'Darn the dog said the boy, he always will be after puppies.'

☞ An old Greenland seaman said he could really believe that crocodiles shed tears, for he had often seen whales blubber.

☞ A want of confidence has kept many a man silent. A want of sense has made many persons talkative.

Poetry.

From the London Anti-Slavery Reporter.

THE SLAVE-MOTHER'S LAMENT.

(Suggested by Hood's "Song of the Shirt.")

The following poem has been contributed to a collection of "Autographs for Freedom," being made by Wilson Armistead, Esq, and which it is intended shall be lithographed and bound up in quarto volumes, to be disposed of for the benefit of the anti-slavery cause. The writer will be happy to receive and forward any others, or they may be sent direct to Mr. Armistead, Water Hall, Leeds. Her Majesty Queen Victoria has, it appears, contributed to this collection, as have many other illustrious personages and numerous well-known friends to the cause:

Weary, and hungry, and worn,
And beating in sorrow her breast,
A Slave-mother sat through the night 'till morn,
Rocking her infant to rest.
Hush! hush! hush!
Sleep, babe! but oh, never wake!
The woe that's for me is in store for thee:
Die, babe! though thy mother's heart break.

Work! work! work!
Long ere the lark carols aloof;
And work, work, work,
'Till the stars shine through Heaven's roof.
Woe! woe, to be a slave,
To be flogged 'till you cannot stand;
Yet a child of God's with a soul to save:
And this in a Christian land!

Work! work! work!
That fine dames cheap cotton may wear:
Work, work, work,
And leave off if you only dare.
Plough, and harrow, and hoe,
Hoe, and harrow, and plough,
No food, no repose, though you sink half dead.
As weary as I am now.

Pick! pick! pick!
'Till torn are your fingers, and sore;
And still, pick, pick,
'Til the cotton is dyed with gore.
Pick! pick! pick!
For have cotton cheap ladies will;
The work that's begun will never be done,
The breath leaves the body until.

Work! work! work!
In sunshine, in wind, and in rain;
Work! work! work!
And still work for another's gain.
Work! work! work!
In sorrow, in sickness, in fear;
Work ever, work, work, work,
With never a bright hope to cheer.

Oh women! think and weep!
Think, mothers; think, sisters; think, wives;
When cotton you buy, and buy it so cheap,
At the price 'tis of human lives.
Pick! pick! pick!
Whilst the cow-hide is cracking around;
Pick! pick! pick!
In dread at its horrible sound.

Oh, mothers! with children dear,
To love, cherish, and call your own;
Change places with me, and ask God to hear,
Whilst you pray for a heart of stone.
Yes! pray for a heart hard as steel,
For the one He gave you would burst,
If torn from your breast were the child you caress'd
And you for despairing were curs'd.

By night as well as day,
That Death's balm in mercy might close
The eyes of my hapless young heaving prey,
And rejoice in its last repose.
For once in old time it was said,
Such innocents let come to Me;
My Kingdom above is made up of these,
And there all my children are free.

And why should such babes live?
To curse of their birth the sad day!
And why should tender mother's give,
A love that is stolen away?
Oh! rather let them die,
Like young buds in an unkind spring;
Let them die ere they know their life is woe,
And long ere their sorrows begin.

Thus through the night till morn,
And beating in sorrow her breast;
A Slave-mother sat, though weary and worn,
Rocking her infant to rest.
Hush! hush! hush!
Sleep, babe! but oh, never wake!
The woe that's for me is in store for thee:
Die, babe! though thy mother's heart break.

RECIPES, &c.

New Method of Making Bread.

The following is from an experiment tried at the London Polytechnic Institution:—

"Tie up one pound and a half of the best American rice in a thick linen bag, allowing ample room to swell, boil it three or four hours until it becomes smooth paste, mix this while warm with fourteen pounds of the best flour, adding the usual quantities of yeast and salt; allow the dough to work a certain time near the fire, after which divide it into loaves. The bread should be dusted in and most vigorously kneaded." This quantity of flour and rice (15½ pounds) has produced 26 pounds 13 oz. of excellent bread, which kept moist and sweet longer than that made by the ordinary process. This flour might be economically used in large families. This is the new French method.

Best Way to Preserve Eggs.

John Wetherby, of Geneva, New York, sends the following receipt for preserving eggs, to the Country Gentleman:

I take a pine barrel, (an old fish barrel well cleaned out answers very well,) and put in the eggs when they are sound, fresh and clean. I then cover them with lime-water, made like common white-wash; the lime settles around the eggs, and the water stands on the top of the lime, (the eggs all under lime.) Look at the barrel once in a while, to see if four inches of water, little more or less, covers the whole. If the water is all dried up, the lime gets hard, and they are difficult to take out when wanted, and you have to carry them somewhere else to wash off the lime; so always keep water on the top. This lime-water must be made at least two weeks before you pour it on the eggs, or your eggs will be boiled hard enough to carry in your pocket.

When I am putting eggs away for any future use, I use a pine pail to wet the lime in, and stand it by the side of the barrel in the cellar until it is cold enough; then pour on the eggs, and fill the pail again, and when it has been stirred two or three times and stood two or three weeks, do as before, and so on till I get through. Keep the vessels covered to keep out all dirt, or the eggs will look a poor, dingy color. Be careful about this in the lime and water, and you will have fine white eggs.

I cannot tell how long they will keep, as I never saw any spoil. I have some that are five years and a half old as good as they ever were. I always preserve in this way, and have done so over thirty years with perfect success. I have seen people have eggs all spoiled and have heard them say, that they would never put any more in lime-water. They put them in lime-water as soon as it was wet up and boiled them hard enough for a Frenchman's breakfast. If I transport eggs, I barrel them with oats, well shaken down and headed up. They do well for a voyage of two or three weeks, but for daily use at sea, for whailing or other long voyages, the first method is sure and perhaps the best known.

A Hint on Packing Pork.

☞ One of our workmen says that his "boss," in Ireland, was noted for putting up excellent pork; and that he always cut every part of the hog into small piecies, of from one to four pounds. In this way the meat was cured through better with a weaker brine than is generally used, and it was more convenient for use afterwards, as a piece of any size required could be easily obtained.—American Agriculturist.

Fixing Ammonia.

Robert Austin, of Manchester, Eng., says that upwards of a ton of horse manure is produced in his stables daily, and the usual offensive odor and evaporation from it was entirely prevented by sprinkling over the dung heap, by means of an ordinary water can, a solution of a pound of common green copperas in a gallon of water. The value of this chemical agent in fixing ammonia should be generally known.

Cement for China.—Dissolve half an ounce of gum acacia in a wine-glass of water, add plaster of Paris sufficient to form a thick paste, and apply it with a brush to the parts required to be cemented together. Being nearly colorless, it possesses advantages which aqual glue and other cements do not.

To tie the pieces of China together, and simply boil them in milk, is also a very good plan.

Miscellaneous.

A Schoolmaster "Boarding Round."

Extract from the journal of a Vermont schoolmaster, published in a Vermont paper.

Monday—went to board at Mr. B——'s had a baked goose for dinner: suppose from its size, and thickness of the skin, and other venerable appearances, to have been one of the first settlers in Vermont; made impression on the pumpkin's breast.

Supper—cold goose and potatoes: family consisting of the man, good wife, daughter Peggy, four boys, Pompey, the dog, and a brace of cats—fire built in the square room about 9 o'clock, and a pile of wood lay by the fire place; saw Peggy scratch her finger's and couldn't take the hint—felt squeamish about the stomach, and talked about going to bed; Peggy looked sullen and put out the fire in the square room; went to bed and dreamed of having eaten a quantity of stone wall.

Tuesday—Cold gander for breakfast, swamp tea, and some nut cake, the latter some consolation. Dinner—the legs, &c, of the gander, done up warm—one nearly dispatched. Supper—the other leg &c., cold; went to bed as Peggy was carrying in the fire to the square room—dreamed I was a mud turtle, and got on my back and could not get over again.

Wednesday—Cold gander for breakfast, complained of sickness and could eat nothing. Dinner—wings, &c., of the gander warmed up, did my best to destroy them for fear they should be left for supper, did not succeed; dreaded supper all the afternoon. Supper—hot Johny cakes; felt greatly relieved, and thought I had got clear of the gander, went to bed for a good night's rest, disappointed. Very cool night, and couldn't keep warm in bed, got up, and stopped the broken window with my coat and vest, no use, froze the tip of my nose before morning.

Thursday—Cold gander again; felt very much discouraged not to see gander half gone; went visiting for dinner and supper, slept abroad and had pleasant dreams.

Friday—Breakfast abroad. Dinner at Mr. B.: cold gander and hot potatoes, last very good, ate those and went to school quite contented. Supper, cold gander and no potatoes, bread heavy and dry, had the headache and couldn't eat. Peggy much concerned, had a fire built in the square room, and thought she and I had better sit there out of the noise, went to bed early—Peggy thought too much sleep bad for the headache.

Saturday—Breakfast, cold gander and hot Johny cake: did very well, glad to come off so. Dinner—cold gander again; didn't keep school this afternoon; weighed and found that I had lost six pounds the last week, grew alarmed, had a talk with Mr. B, and concluded I had boarded out his share.

Anecdotes of Milton.

We have a work in our possession, in which there are several anecdotes of the great poet, that are not familiar to the general reader.

When about to compose, he prepared himself as did Cicero by reading some of the Greek poets, or having them read to him, after he became blind. And we will here remark, that reading the poetry of the best authors, as a preparation for writing poetry, has much greater influence upon the mind in composing, than might be imagined; as the writer doubtless catches more or less of the fire and inspiration of the author.

It is well known that he was blind, but the manner of his losing his sight is perhaps but little known to most readers. It was occasioned by his celebrated controversy with Salmasius. Wishing to answer that learned man, but ridiculous writer, he had lost the use of one of his eyes. His physician declared that if he applied himself to the controversy, he would also lose the other. But his patriotism was not to be bridled. He continued to apply himself to it, in spite of the warning, and the other was soon closed forever.

Writing on the subject of this controversy, we will add, what the impartiality of criticism of the present time will say—that Milton was a total stranger to rancor. When told that Salmasius boasted he had occasioned the loss of one of his eyes, he answered with the bravery of the irritated Puritan. "And I will remember it in his life!" The prediction was shortly after fulfilled, for Christina, Queen of Sweden, withdrew her patronage from Salmasius, and sided with Milton in this controversy, which was of such magnitude that all Europe took a part in the paper war of these two great men. The universal neglect which the proud scholar met with, hastened his death in the course of a year.

The circumstance of his first wife being a great shrew, is also familiar to most readers of his works and life, but not the way in which he got her. He exhibited nothing of the weakness of his mind in his choice of a wife, for his first wife was the object of sudden fancy. He left London, and unexpectedly returned a married man—united to a woman with dispositions so uncongenial, that the poet was frightened at the literary labors of the great man, found his house a solitary place, beat his nephews, and run away after a month's residence.

In connection with this woman is his witty reply to the Duke of Buckingham, after he became blind. The duke called her a fine woman, upon, Milton replied: "I am no judge of colors, and it may be so, for I feel the thorns daily."

Equal to this was the shrewd reply to James II., when Duke of York, who made a visit to Milton out of curiosity. In the course of their conversation, James said to him, that he [illegible] was a judgment of Heaven on him, because he had written against Charles I.'s, (James') father, when [illegible] "Sir, if I had thought so, I should have taken my leave of you sooner."

Milton's daughters were a source of much misfortune to him. Being blind, he was obliged to employ persons to write for him, and he was frequently obliged to have his daughters perform this office. They were unwilling to perform this service, and frequently neglected it. Milton, in order to punish them, would read to them in languages which they did not understand, and they would imitate the sounds, not knowing the meaning of the words. Milton, when he found this out, would say that misfortunes are an index of the wrath of Heaven, what must you think of your father's tragical end? I have only lost my eyes—he lost his head!" The retort was severe, but a just and merited one.

He was the author of the celebrated and oft-quoted line of poetry, of which but a few possibly know the origin. When attending St. Paul's school, London, at one of the public examinations, the subject for poetical composition happened to be our Saviour's first miracle, of changing water into wine. Much was written and handed in on the subject. When it came to Milton's turn, from whom little was expected, he merely wrote on a slate one line,—

"The conscious waters saw its God, and blushed."

The laconic beauty of the line and simple sublimity of the idea were so striking, that the judges looked at each other in astonishment; and after bestowing encomiums upon the more elaborate productions, according to their merits, they awarded the prize to Milton. It was an early evidence of the powers of mind that produced "Paradise Lost."

The pride of Milton, in some things, was great, and equal to his genius. As an evidence of it, Hartop lent him fifty pounds, soon after the restoration, which the poet returned him with much difficulty, as his circumstances were very low. Hartop would have declined it, but Milton sent an angry letter, which was found among Hartop's papers.

As to Milton's sociability, when much pressed by the conversation of others, he was unsociable, and even irritable. He was in the habit of condensing his poetry, and would sometimes dictate a certain number of lines, and then reduce them to one-half the quantity.

His daily routine of occupation, after he became blind, is thus described by Dr. Johnson: "When he first rose, (which was at four in summer and in winter,) he heard a chapter in the Hebrew Bible, and then studied till twelve; then took some exercise for an hour; then dined; then played on the organ and sung, or heard another sing; then studied to six; entertained his visitors till eight; then supped; and after a pipe of tobacco and a glass of water, went to bed." This shows him to have been a man of system and order, without which nothing can be accomplished, and no extensive acquisition be made.—Home Journal.

Warning to Shoemakers.

A person in Mobile has brought a suit for damages against a shoemaker, for failing to comply with a promise to have a pair of boots made by a specified time. We are improving rapidly. In New Jersey they imprison men for stealing umbrellas, and now it appears that shoemakers are to be compelled to keep their promises.—Philadelphia Sun.

Our Colored Friends at Church.

Having been favored with a glance at one of the proof-sheets of Fanny Fern's new work—"Rose Clark"—what should we light upon but this pretty passage:

"I confess to a strong penchant for the African. His welling sympathies, his rollicksome nature, and his punctilious observance of etiquette in his intercourse with his fellows, both amuse and interest me.

"Your genuine African has dancing in his heels, cooking at his fingers' ends, music on his lips, and a trust in Providence for the supply of his future wants equaled only by the birds of the air.

"He dances and prays with a will, nor thinks the two inconsistent, as they are not. You should have gone with me, Rose, to an African church not long since. I had grown weary of my fine churches, and supertine ministers, congregations so polished that they had the coldness as well as the smoothness of marble. I wearied of tasseled prayer-books, with gilt clasps, and all the mummeries which modern religionists seem to have substituted for true worship.

"So I wandered out into the by-streets and poor places to find nature, rough and uncultivated though it might be. A tumble-down looking church, set among some tenement houses, caught my eye. Bare-headed children were hanging round the door, scarcely kept in abeyance by a venerable-looking negro sexton in the porch, with grizzled locks and white neckerchief, whose admonitory shakes of the head habit had evidently made second nature, as he bestowed them promiscuously, right and left, till service was closed.

"I entered and took my seat among the audience. No surly pew occupant placed a forbidding hand on the pew door. Seats, hymn-books, crickets, and fans were at my disposal. The hymn was found for me. I found myself (minus 'a voice') joining in the hearty chorus. Who could help it? 'God save the King' and the Marseillaise were tame in comparison. Every body sang. It was infectious. The bent old negress, with her cracked voice, her broad-shouldered, muscular son, her sweet-voiced mulatto daughter, and her chubby little granchild, with swelling chest, to whom Sunday was neither a bugbear nor a bore. And such hearty singing!—sometimes too fast, sometimes too slow, but to my ear music, because it was soul, not cold science.

"It was communion-Sabbath, and so I went up to the chancel and knelt side by side with my dusky friends. The clergyman was a white man, and it was millennial to see his loving hand of blessing laid on those dusky brows. This is as it should be, said I—this is worship; and as we retired to make room for other communicants, the clergyman himself stepped forward to assist to the chancel a gray old negress, of four-score years, whose tottering steps were even then at the grave's brink. I went home happy, for I had not fed on husks."

Christ Teaching on Universal Salvation.

On one occasion during our Savour's ministry, the question was put to him, "Lord, are there few that be saved?" If Christ had been preaching the final salvation of all men, it was strange that such a question should have been proposed to him. Yet he manifested no surprise at it. He did not reprove nor correct the inquirer for having dishonored the goodness of God by the supposition that any would be finally lost. He did not refer him to his past teachings to learn that all would be saved. Nor did Christ then advance the doctrine of universal salvation. Never had he a better opportunity. The question was directly to that point, "Are there few that be saved?"—What did he answer? Did he say, "All men shall be saved?" Did he say, "Many—the great majority of mankind—shall be saved?" Did he say, "A just and benevolent God will never punish any after this life?" His answer was, "Strive to enter in at the strait gate"—agonize to enter heaven by an incessant warfare with sin—"for many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in and shall not be able.

Whoever preached universal salvation, and whatever authority, certain it is that Christ never preached such doctrine."

The Effects of Fear.

The extraordinary power exerted by fear over the human mind was exhibited in Vienna, in a remarkable manner a few days ago. Dr. ——, an eminent physician in Vienna, obtained leave from the local authorities to try his experiments upon the person of a prisoner who had been condemned to death. Accordingly, an offer was made to the individual in question, holding out the promise of the remission of his punishment, if he would consent to pass the night in the bed of a patient who four hours previously had been carried off by cholera. The prisoner consented, and was put to bed, and after the expiration of some three hours or less, he was seized with violent vomiting, and all the attendant symptoms of cholera. He was attended immediately by several physicians, and ultimately, being a man of strong and vigorous constitution, was completely re-established. His astonishment was great, when Dr. F—— informed him that the bed was perfectly clean and pure, and that no cholera patient had ever lain there.—Vienna Correspondent of the London Morning Post.

Bachelors.—If our Maker thought it wrong for Adam to live single when there was not a woman on earth, how criminally guilty are old bachelors with the world full of pretty girls! Let young men think of this.

Sydney Smith on Preaching

Preaching has become a by-word for long and dull conversation of any kind; and whoever wishes to imply, in any piece of writing, the absence of everything agreeable and inviting, calls it a sermon. One reason for this is the bad choice of subjects for the pulpit. The clergy are allowed about twenty-six hours every year for the instruction of their fellow-creatures; and I cannot help thinking this short time had better be employed on practical subjects, in explaining and enforcing that conduct which the spirit of Christianity requires, and which mere worldly happiness commonly coincides to recommend. These are the topics nearest the heart, which make us more fit for this and a better world, and do all the good that sermons ever will do. Critical explanations of difficult passages of Scripture, dissertations on the doctrinal and mysterious points of religion, learned investigations of the meaning and accomplishment of prophecies, do well for publication, but are ungenial to the habits and taste of a general audience. Of the highest importance they are to those who can defend the faith and study it profoundly; but God forbid it should be necessary to be a scholar, or a critic, in order to be a Christian. To the multitude, whether elegant or vulgar, the result only of erudition employed for the defence of Christianity can be of any consequence; with the erudition itself they cannot meddle, and must be fatigued if they are doomed to hear it. In every congregation there are a certain number whom principle, old age, or sickness, has rendered truly devout; but in preaching, as in everything else, the greater number of instances constitute the rule, and the lesser the exception.—Memoir of Rev. Sydney Smith.

Moral Courage.

A rare virtue, and great as it is rare. We remember when we taught the courage of the field every thing; the charge—the word of command—high sounding and clear amid the battle's fury—the clash of arms, the roar of artillery, the thrill of the bugle's note, as with more than magic sound it bids the soldier dare all for victory—the banner of your country in front—planted there to stand amid victory or death. Oh! how young hearts beat to be actor in such a scene; clogging it glorious to mingle in, and fighting nobly, to lie down and die.

But what is the courage of the battle field compared with the moral courage of every-day life! Stand alone—see friends scowl—hear distrust speak its foul suspicion—watch enemies take advantage of the occasion, laboring to destroy—who would not rather encounter the shock of a hundred battle-fields, and lead a forlorn hope in search, than to bear and brave these things. Why, the one is as the summer breeze on the ocean to winter's stormiest blast. The common spirit may summon courage or play the soldier well. Use quickly fits him for it. But it requires a man to speak out his thoughts as he thinks them—to do—when, like that stormy blast in winter, on old ocean, peace, home, security, and life are threatened to be snatched away. Yet who, looking back on the page of history, or forward to the hope of the future, would hesitate which of the two to choose? The martyrs—what are they? Chronicled names in all hearts. The patriots who died for liberty, ignominiously, and on the scaffold—how fares it with them? Cherished as earth's honored sons. The good who spoke the truth, and suffered for its sake—where are they? The best and brightest—first in our thoughts and love. And yet, what did they? Like men, they spoke the truth that was in them. This was their courage. If they had been silent, if, trembling before tyrants or mobs, they had feared to tell what they knew, to speak what they felt, they would have lived and died like other men. But they had the courage to do this, and through their suffering and truth, lighted up with new glory and power.

Give us the moral courage before everything else! It is the only bravery on which humanity may count for any real blessing. Give us moral courage! for while it nerves a man for duty, it roots out of his heart hate and revenge, and all bad passions, making him wise amid danger, calm amid excitement, just amid lawlessness, and pure amid corruption. It is the crowning beauty of manhood.

Turkish Delicacy.

The Turkish lady is at the boot bazaar. It is utterly impossible that she can be fitted without pulling up her large flowing schalwar (trowsers) to a height equal with that of the leg of the boot. Except for this she could not draw it on. But it is a necessity; and all delicacy that can be is observed. The shoemerchant professes to take no notice; so do all others in the bazaar. And, if you would like to test the propriety that you are now expected to enact, do you just go opposite the stall, and look. The lady will say nothing; she will simply blush, and turn her face away. But the eagle eye of the merchant will detect your gaze on the instant. He will assail you in a voice so loud as, probably, you never before heard from the calm, stately, true believer. And it will be well for your self-respect if you do not happen to understand the Osmanli language. If you do, you will not feel very greatly delighted by his opinions of yourself, but especially of the women in your family.—The City of the Crescent.

The Pen.—In the hand that knows how to use it, is the most powerful weapon known. As the tongue of the absent, how cheering! When the golden tints of virtue guide it, how beautiful! When self respect gives it new vigor, how pleasing! When honor directs it, how respected! When wit sharpens it, how fatal! When scurrility wields it, how contemptible! 'Tis the weapon of the soul!

The Exile's Experience.

One of the most poignant feelings ever endured by the human heart is that experienced by the crimeless exile, from his kindred and country. Indeed, nothing can affect an innocent man or woman more, than to be forced by oppressors, from every earthly comfort, among strangers, in a foreign country—friendless and poor. From such a situation of affliction, the mind goes back to the joyful days of childhood, and dwells with unwonted pleasure upon parental affection and provisions, and home, its comforts and privileges. There are stirred filial affections somewhat peculiar, and patriotic feelings never experienced before, and emotions of fiery indignation towards oppressors, such as no tongue can express. Much of life is made up of early and virtuous associations. Our present happiness is in no small degree such experiences of the past. The sight of former friends and scenes, is desired, and their hallowed influence needed to complete our present bliss. The absence of such, produce a sorrow, their influence a need. A sense of forced separation, and possibly forever, for no crime, from such, produces a wrath that would annihilate such an offensive element. But the conviction of wrong inflicted, in connection with sundered affections, is absolutely crushing to humanity. It is hard to be steadfast, under such circumstances, except in one particular, that to average the wrong, whenever possible; for every other purpose is frequently changed, by that Immutable One.

Human affections are truly tender and very refined. They love to visit the family's old mansion, and feast upon the dainties of home. The garden of the homestead has its perfect charms, in its fruits and flowers—in its walks and scenery almost sublime. O, what emotions of heavenly pleasure, from the pious visitations to the urns which contain the dust of the beloved dead! What devotion there is in that tear,—full of the heart's meaning, dropped at the grave o the departed friend! We feel that the tyrant denying us such a privilege, deserves to die! There is comfort however in the fact, that the innocent, though in exile and sorrow, still live in their country—in the society of their friends. "Though absent in body, they are present in spirit." Thanks to heaven! God has furnished the exile with wings of wind, and a propelling power no tyrant's arm can stay. God has given to the expatriated and wronged, vehicles of thought, in which they may return to their kindred and country. Ah! more, indeed! Exiles dash aside human robes of every kind, and leave the earth, and pass over oceans deep and mountains high, unseen o, heard by mortal beings, and visit oft their father-land! But still it is true, humanity exiled, sits sorrowful and pines, in the land of strangers, and often sings,—

I love to think of my childhood's home,
That stood on the hill, I admire;
The family-home, though far it might roam,
Fixed by my time-honor'd sire.
The dear family-home,
Though far it might roam,—
Still, the home of my earthly desire.

I love to think of the old yew tree,
That grew with the turfs that did cover—
The dust of the dead, when the spirit was free,
Set out by my dear belov'd mother.
The old yew tree,
That ought to be free,
Ah! free, from the axe of my brother.

I love to think of the big grape vine,
That spread itself over the arbor;
That luscious vine, that made us good wine,
Planted by my dear little brother.
The luscious grape vine,
Which made us good wine—
The vine that surpass'd every other.

I love to think of the rose bush, too,
That bloom'd with its neighbor, the twister;
The vine on the mound, the place where it grew
In the garden, work'd by my sister.
O! the rose bush, too,
That on the mound grew
In the garden, work'd by my sister.

I love to think of the fruit trees rare,
Which I set, when a boy in my glee;
Trees that did bear, while under my care,
Though now worthless forever to me.
Ah! these fruit trees rare,
With profit did bear,
Though now worthless forever to me!

Thoughts of the past, how sacred thou art!
O thy power compels me to love!
Kindred and home are dear to my heart,
Though so far off, below and above.
Yes, sacred thou art,
Ah! dear to my heart,
Though so far off, below and above!

The Chinese.

The Chinese of California appear to be annoyed by the treatment they receive from the Americans, to whom they have addressed a respectful remonstrance, as follows:

"We, the undersigned, Chinese merchants, come before you to plead the cause of ourselves and our countrymen, residing in San Francisco, and scattered throughout California. We ask for all the industrious persons of our race, the privilege of dwelling in the State, and of pursuing our labors and occupations without molestation."

It proceeds to say:—

"No injustice, no severity has been spared towards us. We came to this country, expecting a liberal and hospitable reception, worthy in every respect of the generous character which fame has given to the Americans. Many of us were attracted by promises, and by the offer of a free passage, which was given for the purpose of inducing others to follow us. And now, after leaving our country, and bringing hither our fortunes and our industry, what do we meet? Instead of the protection and equality which the laws of a great nation appear to promise all who seek protection under its flag, or an asylum upon its territory, we find only inequality and oppression.

"You reproach us that we are idolatrous, that we do not practice the precepts of Christ; but if we are not deceived, Christ orders his disciples to look upon all men as brothers. Is it, then, consistent with the Christian religion—the religion of humility and love—to deny the humanity of an entire race of men, and to treat them as a species inferior, and unworthy of pity? As for ourselves, we would rather not act thus; for our great philosopher, Confucius, whom we respect, and whose doctrines we practice, orders us to be humane, charitable, and polite."

This document was signed by Hee Hee & Cie, Yu Sing & Cie, Hop Kie & Cie, and twenty others, whose names will not much enlighten our readers, if the foregoing are specimens of the rest. The disposition among us to trample down a people for being "guilty of a skin not colored like our own," is as abhorrent to the dictates of humanity, as to those of the Christian revelation. We hope that the just rebuke of these Mongolian strangers will have a salutary effect upon us professedly civilized and Christianized Caucasians. We sigh in vain for the universal brotherhood of the human race, so long as a difference of physical conformation is made a barrier to an exercise of the ordinary civilities and of common justice.—Chronicle.

The above document tells its own story. It is a severe rebuke to the so-called democracy of the United States, coming as it does from Chinese merchants. It covers the silent Church of America, on such injustice and wrongs, with everlasting infamy, coming as it does from heathen idolators. If "fame has given a generous character to Americans," it is also true that facts set them forth as the greatest hypocrites on earth! Let the American's mark—this HEATHEN tell them that their "LAWS APPEAR TO PROMISE PROTECTION and EQUALITY." May it be taken to heart, that those indolatrous people spurn Americans religion, and well they may, for the most part. They remind American christians that the precepts of Christ order them "to look upon all men as brothers, and to treat them as brothers!" and not to deny the humanity of an entire (the colored) race of men," and assure them at the same time, that their heathenish religion induces them to do better than Christianity does them,—hence, they say, "As for ourselves, we would rather not act thus." We perfectly agree with these "Chinese merchants," that their religion of "Confucious" is superior to that of "Christ," if the professing Christians of America, generally, are fair exponents of it. We worship not their god,—we have not their piety, and we don't want their heaven! We hate the first, the second we spurn as hypocrisy, and the third is the "Hades of Scripture!

The Abuse of Women.

A friend from Amherstburgh, C. W., writes us that certain respectable women are not treated with the respect due them, by the officers of the steamer "Bay City." If it be true, then let them cease to patronize such a steamer. Our old friend, Levi Foster, keeps and runs a good line of stage coaches between Amherstburgh and Windsor, and all, who wish to go from Detroit to Amherstburgh, &c., will do well to try the stage.

☞ Why is the price of toll on the Plank Road between Chatham and Louisville, C. W., changed every week or too? Let us have things clear, and the public be told of the reason, and thus free the young and obliging gate keepers from suspicion! We have heard of complaint in this matter, and we have been charged different prices ourselves, several times within a few months.

The Bazaar.

Agreeably to the public announcement, the Bazaar came off in the Town Hall on the 3rd instant, in the most brilliant manner. There were four large tables laden with the weight of ice cream, oysters, confectionary, meats and fancy articles. The company looked exceedingly well, and seemed highly delighted with the entertainment, the good music by Jones' Brass Band, and the very polite attention of the Committee of arrangements. Every class of respectable citizens was represented, and the greatest good feeling was apparent. Too much praise cannot be bestowed upon the ladies who had the management, as it certainly was in every way highly creditable to the place. Among the conservators of propriety present, were, Elder Young, of the A. M. E. Church, smiling as usual at the sight of so many good things, and keeping at the same time a sharp look out for any breach of decorum among the young folks; Mr. Whipper, encouraging the "young idea;" Mr. John J. Jackson, ever smiling; neighbor Andrew Smith, so well known for his excellent Groceries, shaking his sides with merriment at the advantage of his momentary grass-widdower-hood of his bachelor friend, Alexander, who makes those excellent Boots at his place, just below the Market-house; and J. Gran', with his enterprising go-a-head look, confabulating with our leading citizens; and Charity, Cornelius, we mean, with his benevolent countenance, just one of the best mechanics in town, who, with Alexander, before spoken of, keeps constantly the well seasoned work for the country and town people. Our industrious friend, Dr. Wilson, who is as good a fit as any of them, was not there—staying home, probably, laying up for a rainy day, like the industrious bee. Letcher and Hilton were also present; the latter young gentleman, like all young men, never "goes" to parties or entertainments, but may always be found on the ground; and Ramsay, one of our best carpenters, gravely looking at the fine decorations, and dreaming perhaps of a future fortune, the result of his great industry. Where was Hall—"Josephine," we mean?—as good a workman as ever handled the plane,—away with the Doctor, arranging for the future. We must not pass Jones, of the music by, for, however small he may be, as compared with his Saxe-Horn, he blows a famous blast, as do his brother musicians; and, in truth, it cannot be said of our young Canada musicians, mechanics or citizens, that they play by "air," or botch at their trades, whether it be Bazaar or not, they work for a purpose here, and that is evident; these and a host of good looking young ladies, with their careful mothers, aunts, uncles and brothers, all looking as well as could be, and keeping within the proper bounds, were present. We hope to report another soon, as we hear there is to be one; and also, that one for the Freeman to come off about Christmas or the New Year.

The letter from our friend, Wm. Still, in last week's paper, was thought to be a proper substitute for the promised one from Miss Shadd, as it embodied much that was interesting on the same subject, and as there was not room for both. In addition to the personal compliment paid by the Committee to the Freeman's Agent, a goodly number of names were added to its list, and numberless good wishes for its success were tendered. A communication is on hand, embracing much matter concerning the condition, state of society, and intelligence of Philadelphians, and other observations, made during a short visit to the States.

Correspondence.

For the Provincial Freeman.

The proposed scheme of Mr. Henry Garrett, of London, C. W., for emancipating the slaves in the United States, was laid before the citizens of Chatham, in the second Baptist Church Nov. 19th, by the said Mr. Garrett, in the form of a lecture, and after said lecture, it was, on motion, Resolved, that the meeting approve or disapprove of said scheme by resolution, and said resolutions to be published in the Provincial Freeman.

On motion, a Committee of seven was appointed to meet on the 20th instant, at 5 o'clock, P. M., to draft said Resolutions, which was accordingly done.

The following is their Report:

At a meeting appointed by Committee to consider the above mentioned scheme, by Henry Garrett, on emancipation, it was, on motion:—

Resolved,— That we do denounce the said scheme as being unholy, unjust, and impracticable, fraught with the greatest evil.

1st. It acknowledges the right of property in man.

2nd. It shows to every intelligent mind, that it would be wrong for the Slaveholder to emancipate his slave without an equivalent for said slave.

3rd. It shows that such a scheme will not only augment the slave States, but increase the trade; because the money acquired by such a course, would not change the disposition of the Slaveholder; but increase his desire to carry on the nefarious traffic in those States and Territories now free.

Your Committee would, therefore, highly commend the various plans now in operation in the States for the abolition of slavery, (to wit:) Moral suasion, the power at the ballot box, the power of education, and the happy force of the underground Rail Road.

Your Committee would, therefore, beg to suggest, the sending of missionaries of the cross of Christ, to the Master and slave, to enlighten and christianize them.

COMMITTEE.

WINDSOR, C. W., Dec. 6.

Old Garrett again—Refusing Lots to Colored People—The Windsor Herald—C. C. Foote.

I arrived here yesterday. Went last night to hear Garrett, the party who is buying all the slaves. He was up at the colored meeting house, crying and pretending as usual. The colored subjects here, are very indignant at Mr. S. S. McDonell, for refusing the bid of colored people at a public sale of town lots. Rev. Israel Campbell, who bid a lot in, but who was not permitted to keep it, has entered suit against this McDonell, and has committed the management of the case to COLONEL PRINCE. By the way, there is a strong rumor here that Colonel Prince will be the Conservative candidate for Kent, at the proper time; if so, the colored voters will have nothing to fear from him; he is just the man! As you hinted about the pro-slavery tendencies of Reformers some time ago, Mr. Editor, allow me to say, that in this part of Essex, where there should be the strongest British feeling—being as it is, almost in the very jaws of Yankeedom—the Reformers are, with the fewest exceptions enemies to the colored people, of the most contemptible kind. Many of them, white yankees, who came to this free country for more liberty; but who, true to their inferior training, and dirty instincts, are carrying into practice here the same tricks, as they would have done at home, if they could have made the influence necessary. Others again, are ignorant French, whom demagogues frighten, with the idea that the colored people are dangerous. These people, stupid to the last degree, beyond improvement or progress of note, dressed in their moccasins, and glorying in their "dog-carts," have the face to "put on airs" about the colored people. There are a few Scotch, and Scotch Irish, too, from whom better things should be expected—mostly of the pro-slavery Congregational, and other churches of the United States, or some other yankee denomination of course, who are more hateful in their hatred than yankees themselves: Like the slaveholders of their class, they make worse masters than those born to an inheritance of slaves; the position of negro-hater is a new one to them, and like a beggar with a new coat, they are in danger of out-Heroding Herod himself. I am sure the most pro-slavery yankee must feel a thorough contempt for such lick-spittle, dirt-eating servants. They or those of that character, colorophobia, do not take the bid of colored people at public sales.

Some of them may be seen distributing religious (?) tracts of the American Board on Sundays; and at other times, with a hypocrisy worse than the devil; for at their Sunday schools, they drive out the children of the very people upon whom they intrude their tracts. S. S. McDonell, of lot notoriety, is talked of as a candicate for Parliament, on the Reform ticket, in opposition to the Conservative vote, and to Mr. Rankin, who, though patriotic enough to disregard "baboons and monkeys," at one time is known to the less objectionable than this young McDonell, the panderer to yankee prejudice. It is a great pity for McDonell! for it is plain to be seen that he has not cut his political "eye-teeth," else he would not so clearly disregard the signs of the times. There are many men here who have a foot on either side of the line, waiting for a collision between the two countries to step on the other side. The "Windsor Herald," a Reform paper, here, under the management of an all-wise party, called McEwen, pretends to prate against the colored people too. If it had been the New Orleans Picayune, or the New York Herald, one would respect its power, while condemning its wickedness; but as it is a miserable fly leaf, in comparison, emanating, as it does, from such a mud hole, and controlled by such dough faces, the most ineffable contempt is the consequence.

While upon these Windsor matters, Rev. C. C. Foote, of Michigan, defunct beggar for the absolete Refugees Home, Old Clothes Agent for the fugitives, and Religious Nothing-arian, (vide account of the late Bibb and Jackson trial,) was over here yesterday from the other side, I learn, trying to persuade colored householders to petition for a colored Government School! How much do you think Canadian yankee coalitionists pay him for volunteering in such dirty business? Wonder if he gets 25 per cent, for this, too? The people here are building two large school houses, which will soon be done, and as the colored people have never asked for a separate school, and as their taxes have gone into the common fund, they are clearly entitled to admission. But this Foote, at the instance of his master, or his own wicked heart, while pretending to be doing for the fugitives, proposes this step, as he says, to prevent him from having to beg funds for a teacher here. Why the people neither desire his begged funds, nor his teacher, and they have told him so. He tells them, if they delay a movement of the sort until the 25th December, they will not have an opportunity to get their separate school. Did impudence even go farther? He knows that if he can by his arts succeed in getting enough of them to petition, that they shut themselves out of the new school houses at once. Such meddlesome scourges ought to be stopped. More again.

Arrival of the Atlantic.

NEW YORK, Nov. 30.

A St. Petersburg despatch says the Emperor left Nicholaieff, Nov. 7, for the Crimea, to thank in person Gortschakoff's army. He returned via Moscow to St. Petersburg.

Up to the 12th the Allies had not undertaken anything in the Crimea. The exportation of breadstuffs had been prohibited at all Turkish ports. Importations allowed free of duty.

A portion of the French fleet had anchored at Kars Bay.

A private despatch says Russia has absolutely prohibited the exportation of breadstuffs. Sweden has followed her example.

The allied fleet at the mouth of the Bug and Dnieper were reduced to twenty-eight vessels.

Official accounts of General Williams and Mouravieff's plan of attack on Kars were published.

Numerous communications were being exchanged between the courts of Vienna and St. Petersburg, but it is thought the preliminaries for peace would not take a definate shape till the arrival of Sir H. Seymour.

It is rumored that the secretaryship of the colonies will be given to Fredrick Peel, who will be succeeded in the war office by Mr. Layard.

Codrington has accepted the command in the Crimea.

The Turks had gained a slight victory over the Russians.

The News.

The European mail by the steamer "Atlantic," arrived yesterday, close at the heels of Saturday's telegraphic dispatch. The event of chief importance is the victorious advance of Omar Pacha, in Asia. Doubtless this able General will not only succeed in raising the blockade of Kars, but also achieve such advantages as shall render extremely doubtful the ultimate escape of the Russians. With the army of Kars to the south, the Circassians on the north, and Omar Pasha pressing hard on his western flank, Mouravieff must needs be active and skilful to avoid being cut off. General Williams gives a graphic description of his late victory. There appears to have been nothing definite in the southern Crimea. At Kinburn the Allies are fortifying their recent acquisitions. The expeditionary force had returned. It is therefore, quite improbable that any operations have as yet been commenced against Nicholaieff or Kherson. Domestic advices are unimportant. The temporary excitement caused by American war rumours had completely blown over. The ex-Ministers had turned lecturers. Mr. Gladstone had been lecturing on the Colonies. Lord John Russel was also amusing himself in a similar manner. The public received him with unmistakeable symptoms of dissatisfaction.

It appears that the Home Secretary, Sir George Grey, having recently received a large number of applications as to whether females were entitled to vote at the election under the Metropolis Local Management Act, submitted the question to the Attorney General, who decided that the ladies have a right to give their votes at such election. What next?

LATEST NEWS FROM ABROAD.

The Russians Defeated in a Pitched Battle.

The following most important dispatches respecting the war in Asia, may be relied on as authentic:—

"On the 5th of November (the anniversary of Inkerman) Omar Pacha beat the Russians in a pitched battle on the river Ingour, in Mingrelia. The Russians numbered 20 000. The fight lasted five hours. The Russians suffered severely."

A second dispatch adds:—

"Omar Pacha forced the passage of the Ingour at four points against superior numbers. The Generalissimo has pushed on to Kutais."

Immediately on the receipt of the intelligence of the brilliant victory of General Williams at Kars, Omar Pacha set out at once with considerable forces from Soukoum Kale. He appears to have proceeded by rapid marches to the river Ingour, in Mingrelia, where, as we learn from one of the above dispatches, he found a superior force of Russians prepared to dispute the passage, which, however, he succeeded in forcing at four points, after a combat of five hours. The second dispatch informs us that he then pushed on to Kutais.

We trust we may now conclude that Kars is safe. From other sources we learn that its gallant defenders still keep their communications open. Indeed, the Russians, even on the 1st of November, seemed to be making preparations to raise the blockade. Their movements would, no doubt, be hastened by the news of the glorious victory of the 5th of November, which adds another to the well-earned laurels of the great general, Omar Pacha. Once at Kutais, Omar Pacha would have effected one-third of his march on Kars.

The Danubian Principalities.

BERLIN, Thursday Evening.

We learn from Vienna that the instructions brought by M. de Bourquency have led to the adoption of a basis, for the future conference at Constantinople on the subject of the Principalities. Austria is to resign to the allies the positions they may require, in the event of a campaign on the Danube in the spring. The anticipators of peace say, that everything is in a train for the renewal of negociation as soon as Sir Hamilton Seymour, your new English Ambassdor, arrives at Vienna.

The Invalide Russe has the following dispatch from Prince Gorschakoff:—

"The allies continue to occupy the Valley of Baidar with two divisions. Nothing more to report from the Crimea."

Seizure of an English Colonel by Austria.

A private letter from Bucharest, dated the 3rd instant, mentions as follows:—

"Prince Stirbey has suffered from a very dangerous illness, from which he has recovered, but the physicians say that he will feel the effects of it for a long time.

"A very serious affair has just occurred here. At two o'clock yesterday, the English Colonel Thier was arrested in his lodgings by the Austrian military authorities. He was stript of his English uniform by them, and forced to put on the Austrian great coat. Colonel Thier had served as Lieutenant in the Austrian army, and passed over with his company in 1849 to the Piedmontese. After the war he entered the British service, and advanced in it to the rank of Colonel. He was sent to Cronstadt, in Transylvania, the night that followed his arrest. He was at Bucharest 10 or 12 days, having been sent by the English government to buy horses and carts for the army. He was duly accredited to the English agents, as to the Ottoman authorities. Colonel Thier is a Hungarian. Ten minutes after his arrest, the Consul General of England went to the house of General Corinni to reclaim the Colonel. The General gave a brief and decided refusal. Mr. Colquhoun thereupon addressed an official letter to him on the subject, and it is said that the reply was to the effect—'I seize my deserters wherever I find them. I have the right to cause Thier to be shot instantly, and if the Emperor commands me to give him up I shall break my sword.' The sensation produced here by the conduct of the Austrians is immense. I hope you will now understand the fault committed in allowing the Austrians to enter the Principalities."

Capture of Russians in the Sea of Okhotsk.

We are favored by the Secretary of the Peninsular and Oriental Company with the following extract of a letter from the company's agent at Hong Kong, received from Calcutta yesterday, and bearing date four days later than those brought by the last China advices:—

"The Bremen brig Greta arrived in this harbor yesterday, in charge of Lieutenant Gibson, R. N. She was taken a prize by her Majesty's steamer Barracouta, on the 1st of August in the Sea of Okhotsk, under American colors, and having on board 27 Russian sailors, part of the crew of the Russian frigate Diana, which was wrecked some months ago on the coast of Japan."

The Russian fleet was supposed to be to the north of the river Amoor.

The Friend of China, in an extra edition dated Tuesday, Sept. 18, has the following:—

"The Bremen brig Greta arrived on the 18th, in charge of Lieutenant Gibson, of her Majesty's steamship Barracouta. The Greta was found in the Okhotsk Sea, about seven weeks ago, with 280 Russians of the wrecked Diana's crew, including a prince of the blood. The prisoners were distributed as follows:—Barracouta, 80; Pibue, 100; Spartan, 100.

Close of the Paris Exhibition.

The Emperor closed the Exhibition on Thursday, the 10th. All went off well, and with enthusiasm. Prince Napoleon read an address, and the Emperor replied. In his reply, the Emperor said that the success of the Exhibition proved the general conviction that the war only originated in its provokers. Europe must pronounce for or against the allies, in order to bring about peace. Public opinion always decided the victory at last. In returning to their homes, let the exhibitors say that France sympathises with all in desiring the triumph of right and justice. The Duke of Cambridge was present. There was great cheering inside and outside of the the building. The distribution by the Emperor of medals and decorations adjudged to the exhibitors, took place with great solemnity. The following Englishmen, who have distinguished themselves as exhibitors, are to receive the decorations of the Legion of Honor: Painters: Sir R. Eastlake, Mr. Mulready Sculptor: Mr. Gibson, Architecture: Mr. Cockerell. Domestic Economy: Darnton, Lambton. Industry: Mr. Crowley, Mr. Tennant, Dr. Neil Arnott, Mr. Robert Napier, Mr. Brunel, Mr. Stephenson, Mr. Krupp, Mr. Elkington, Mr, Baxter, Mr. Titus Salt, Mr. Minton, Mr. Brett, Mr. Faraday, Mr. Logan [Canada.] Lord Rosse, Mr. Airey, Mr. Lawes, Mr. Fairbairn, [Wm.,] Mr. Platt, sen. Mr. Hunt, of the firm of Hunt and Roskell, had the honor of being received by the Emperor at St. Cloud on Tuesday evening.

Threatened War in Kansas.

The National Intelligencer states that the President has received a despatch from the Governer of Kansas, stating that civil war is actually threatened in that State, and demanding promp assistance from the Government The President has ordered that troops be immediately despatched from the nearest posts to the scene of disaster.

The Irish Invasion.

NEW YORK, Dec. 4.

A meeting of delegates from the different organizations in the United States and Canada is now in session at the Astor House. About 150 delegates are in attendance, and more are expected. The object of the meeting is supposed to have reference to the movements on foot for securing the redemption of Ireland, by means of an invasion from this country. Reporters are not admitted, and the proceedings are kept private.

☞ A letter from Captain Little, of the brig Loango, of Penn., dated Antigua, Nov. 12th, states that his vessel was boarded in the harbour of St. Johns, on the 10th ult., by the Superintendent of Police and the Colonial Treasurer, acting under the orders of the English, who forcibly took away the cook, named John Ross, under the pretence of his being a slave to set his foot on British soil. In vain Ross protested that he was a free man. He was dragged ashore, and placed in charge of his newly found friends. The British officials went on board the vessel, under the pretext of searching for articles contraband of the war. Ross was in custody of the police awaiting the result of the investigation.

The Fugitive Slave Law a Dead Letter.

Under this head, the Romney Intelligencer, published in Hampshire county, Virginia, gives an account of the mission of Captain John Harness, of Hardy county, to Buffalo, New York, where a slave of his had been imprisoned for some misdemeanor. Captain Harness was accompanied by several friends, who were to aid him in the recovery of the negro. The Intelligencer says:—

"They found, upon their arrival at Buffalo, the negro fellow still in jail. They applied to every lawyer of any respectability in the city to prepare the necessary papers, but could not obtain one, though liberal fees were offered! They applied to the firm of Smith & Haven. Smith had a year or two ago, we understand, obtained, under the provisions of the Fugitive Act, a slave belonging to Dr. Parran, of Hardy—but the firm positively refused having anything to do with the matter, owing, as they said, to the excited state of the popular mind on the subject. Bowen, the United States Commissioner, refused to aid them in any manner in preparing their papers.

"The Hon. H. W. Rogers, the law partner of Bowen, and the President of the Hard Democratic Convention, which assembled in Syracuse, New York, last week, upon being applied to, through a friend, positively refused to act in the matter! Judge Hall even said to a friend of Captain Harness, that Captain Harness had better not push matters: that, even if he obtained possession of the negro, the mob would rescue him; but that if Captain Harness insisted, that he (Judge Hall) would do his duty. The reasons assigned by these lawyers were, that they were afraid of a mob. Captain Harness was finally compelled to leave.

Working Men and Slavery.

Some of our American fellow working men, can see with eagle eye and Tiger ferocity the great injury done them by Irishmen and Germans coming to this Country and throwing their labour into the American market, in competition with their own; and sometimes they are ready to fight them and drive them from the country—but they cannot see that the labour of three and a half millions of slaves thrown into the American market, working for nothing but victuals and old clothes, checks the price of labour at all. If the Germans and Irish were to come and enter our workshops and spread out upon our fields 3,500,000 strong, and work for nothing but a bare subsistance, these Americans would have good grounds for complaint; but on the contrary, they demand a fair equivolent for their labour, and many of them get rich. Not so with the black men of this country, they are forced to work for nothing, which cuts down the price of labour in America to an almost starving point. The attention of the laborers should be turned to this important fact, and let them see that three and a half millions of slaves are forced by American tyrants to infringe upon the wages of the American laborers. The white laborer curses the poor abused slave because he is a slave, and the employer takes the advantage of the white man's ignorance, and makes a slave of him also. The white man is made to believe he is the black man's superior, and to continue his superiority, is induced to vote for men that will perpetuate their slavery and force them to endless toil; which of course causes a material reduction in the white man's labor, keeps him constantly on the run and a rid leaves no time for the improvement of his mind. He is consequently forced into the employers hands at their own price, and remains a hard-working, poor, proud, simple slave. The true position for all working men, is to unite together; let their color be red, white, black, blue or green, and elevate their condition; for let any of these colors become slaves to the employer, it cripples the condition of all the other colors, and to a great degree, enslaves them also. All working men should unite and abolish the long hours of labor and give themselves time to read and converse with each other, and learn the cause why a few live in affluence and ease, and why the great mass have to labor every day. When this is well learned, no white laborer will ever sanction black Slavery or Slavery of any kind.

Boston Committee and Slaveholders.

Mr. Garrison having been invited by the Boston Committee to deliver one of its series of Lectures on Slavery, declines in a spirited letter, in which he tells a great deal of home truth. Without endorsing all the terms in which he speaks of the persons who have been solicited by the Committee to edify a Boston audience on Slavery, we think he is right in refusing to take part in a course to which such men as Mr. Wise and Mr. Atchison have been invited to contribute. Christianity enjoins us to forgive our enemies, but we are not called upon to do them special honor. There might be some reason for inviting a gentleman, opposed to the Anti-Slavery Movement, and educated, to believe that there are insuperable obstacles in the way of emancipation, to present his views publicly on the subject; but we can see no reason why a truculent partisan of Slavery, devoted to the work of propagating it and securing its supremacy as a political element, should be honored with such an invitation. Especially, when to this wicked partisanship are added flagrant misrepresentation and abuse of Anti-Slavery men, it deserves not courtesy, not respect, but indignant and stern reprobation.—National Era.

☞ There are one thousand cases awaiting trial before the criminal Court of New Orleans.

DISCOURAGING TO MISSIONARIES.—On the Island of Fate, in the South Sea, two missionaries, with their wives, were recently roasted and eaten by the natives with whose peculiar institutions they were interfering.

GREAT FALL OF WHEAT.—A large wheat elevator was completed at the mouth of the Genesee river, near Rochester, N. Y., a few weeks since. Recently the building contained 80,000 bushels of wheat; the weight crushed it; about 10 000 bushels went into the river—loss, $30,000

☞ We learn from the St. Catharines Constitutional, that on Tuesday last an inquest was held in that place on the body of a negro named William Jones, who had been stabbed with a knife and instantly killed by another negro, also of the name of Jones, while engaged together in a scuffle. The murderer has been fully committed to jail to stand his trial for wilful murder. The St. Catharines Post, after describing the affair says:—"The most horrible part of the story remains to be told. Mrs Jones was in such a beastly state of intoxication, that she lay down on the floor, making a pillow of the dead body of her husband, and slept there until morning, perfectly unconscious of all around her, or the dreadful tragedy that had occurred in her house a few hours previous."

☞ We regret to hear, that on Friday last, two sons of W. Weller, Esq., of Cobourg, were drowned. The young men were skating, when one of them got into a hole in the ice, and his brother in attempting to extricate him, fell in also.

Died,

In this town, yesterday, Jane Shankland, wife of Mr. Stone, Merchant, aged 23 years and 11 months.

In Cincinnati, Nov. 9, Mrs. Tamar, wife of Rev. Joseph Fowler, in the 54th year of her age, of bronchitis.

Many of the friends in Canada will look back upon the days happily spent in the society of Sister Tamar Fowler. She was a true and faithful friend to Christ, and therefore was necessarily the friend of the poor and afflicted. Her illness was a protracted one, of years standing, during which period she suffered much in body; but in Christ, all was well; and thus in the arms of Jesus, she fell asleep!

NOTHING LIKE LEATHER.

IF YOU WOULD BE RICH,

Read this, and save your Penny.

GOOD morrow, friend—I'm a stranger in your borough, can you inform me where I can get a pair of good boots made?"

"Yes, sir, I can; just go to T. W. WILSON'S, King St East, Chatham, next to Smith's Grocery; that's the place; he'll accommodate you most satisfactorily."

"Well, how is your judgment in regard to the quality of boots and shoes?"

"Most excellent—I'm an old boot and shoe maker; many are the days that I've drawn the cords."

"Where did you say I could find him?"

"Why, the next door to Mr. Andrew Smith's Grocery, corner of King and William Streets, East,—any person can tell you."

"Will you conduct me there?"

"I will with pleasure; for I know him to be, from experience, one of the best manufacturers of BOOTS AND SHOES in town. His stock is of his own manufacture, and he has always on hand a superior quality for gentlemen's wear. He's also very particular in getting up his work; so I'm confident he can't fail to give reasonable satisfaction to those who favor him with their patronage."

"There are some boot makers whose work is beautiful to the eye, but plaguy pinching to the feet; and I have lumps upon each instep, which in foul weather give me excruciating pain."

"Ah, yes, too much have I suffered by fetters from the boot moulders hands; but he's not one of them; he endeavours to make a systematic fit, measuring from joint to heel, and from lump to toe—closely observing the most minute protuberance, if there be any upon the feet, and he seldom fails to make his boots set as easy thereon as a glove upon a lady's tender finger. Besides, he always keeps a superior stock on hand; perhaps you might obtain a pair upon the instant, that would fit your feet and please the eye."

"Then I must try him."

"Try him, of course, and you'll save at each end of your bargain. First—you'll buy cheaper—secondly, your boots will wear you longer."

"Come, let's go."

"I'm ready—Are you a cash man?"

"I am; for he who pays cash clips the discount of credit, and secures it in his own pocket."

"Then that's the place, for his motto reads"—

Ask of me no trust, when you come to buy;
Ask of me no trust, for you I must deny;
Ask of me no trust, it hath destroyed many;
Ask of me no trust, I cannot grant you any;
Ask of me no trust, but with your cash rally;
Ask of me no trust, nor with my pocket dally.

OF MRS. SIDNEY JACKSON, who left the State of Pennsylvania, about the time that the Fugitive Slave Law was passed, and who came to Canada, leaving some property in the above-named State. A MORE "IMPORTANT NOTICE!"

American Tract Society—Slavery.

THE Independent, of New York, in an article in that paper, of the 15th March, being one of a continuation of articles regarding the American Tract Society, has this sentence:—"For thirty years, one of the greatest institutions of Evangelical Christendom has been testifying in favor of the institution of Slavery, the buying and selling of human beings, and the profession of the slave-trader, are less offensive to God, less contary to the Gospel, less perilous to the souls of men, than the practice of dancing. It has attempted to exhibit and authenticate, on the widest scale, an administration of Christianity, in which there shall be no more syllable of rebuke for crimes that shock the morals sense of Christendom. The influence of the Tract Society has tended to make the Southern churches more timid and cowed in the presence of the imperious slave-trading interest. As a consequence of this policy—partly, but not exclusively—behold the SOUTHERN APOSTACY!"

In December 1811, a report of "The Committee of the Synod of New York and New Jersey, on the subject of the mutilations of books by the American Tract Society," was published; and in that report, the mutilations and omissions in the editions published, by that Society, of D'Aubigne's History of the Great Reformation, were pointed out—besides, there are the omissions and expurgations in other books published, as to the vile sin of Slavery, and the substitution of sentences other than the original.

The notice by me entitled, "Publications" relative to these matters has been widely circulated, and a Canadian public are again reminded of their duty.

A HISTORY OF ALL NATIONS,

FROM THE

EARLIEST PERIODS TO THE PRESENT TIME,

OR

UNIVERSAL HISTORY:

IN WHICH THE HISTORY OF EVERY NATION, ANCIENT AND MODERN, IS SEPARATELY GIVEN.

Illustrated by 70 Stylographic Maps and 700 Engravings

By S. G. GOODRICH,

AUTHOR OF 'PICTORIAL GEOGRAPHY OF THE WORLD,' 'PARLEY'S CABINET LIBRARY,' 'PARLEY'S TALES,' &c.

Complete in one imperial octavo volume, of more than twelve hundred pages of double column letter press; and upwards of seven hundred elegant illustrations.

It is believed that a Universal History, suitable in form, extent, and arrangement, to the wants of the mass of American readers, has never been presented to the public. For this reason, and in compliance with numerous suggestions from those entitled to respect, the author has undertaken the formidable task of supplying one of a popular character and for general use.

A reader of history should always have in mind two things—viz., the place where, and the time when, an event happened. In the present work therefore, the geography of each country whose history is carefully given; and to aid the reader, seventy stylographic maps have been added. Careful attention, also, has been paid to Chronology, so that, at every page and every chapter, the reader may find the dates of the events which are described.

In order to avoid the confusion which inevitably arises from embracing the whole history of mankind in a general chronological view, the author has adopted an ethnographic arrangement, by which he presents each nation separately. The advantages of this plan for a popular treatise, are obvious. The mind of the reader is not overtasked by a boundless extent of view, nor bewildered by a perplexing multiplicity of objects. On the contrary, everything is clear and distinct. Events, instead of being forced out of their true place and connection, are presented in easy and natural succession, thus imparting to the work the attraction of [illegible] narrative. Another [illegible] it not merely admits, but invites descriptive details, illustrative anecdotes, personal adventures and sketches of character, all of which serve not only to give life and effect to the pages of the historian, but to impart the colors of truth and reality to the pictures he may present

While the work thus presents a separate and distinct history, and also exhibits the present state of every nation, ancient and modern, including the recent revolutions in Europe, still, for the purpose of showing how nations have acted upon or influenced the destinies of one another, General Views are given, at suitable periods, presenting the great movement of mankind, as one family, in its onward march from the past to the present time.

It is proper to state, that while the author promises only a compilation, yet he has endeavored to choose from the highest and best authorities; and while the work is offered as a popular treatise, it still seeks to present the practical results of philosophic investigation; and finally, that while justice is rendered to the classic ages, the whole work is written in the spirit of modern civilization—which places justice above power, prefers peace to war, and regards the Christian, rather than the soldier, as the true hero of our race.

The work is illustrated with 700 engravings designed rather for instruction than mere embellishment. Picturing views of cities, monuments, coins, medals, portraits, weapons of war, vehicles for travelling, dress, religious rites and the manners and customs of ancient and modern times.

With a view to render it more valuable especially in the family library, an ample chronological [illegible] continued [illegible] pages, thus rendering it a Cyclopedia of Universal Gazetteer, and, for family and common use, as a book of reference.

The work is in one imperial octavo volume containing 1240 royal 8vo pages, in double columns and contains as much printed matter as six or eight octavo volumes of ordinary execution

AND IS BROUGHT DOWN TO THE YEAR 1854.

The following is a notice of it from the Boston Post:

"Of the excellence and character of the compilation we have heretofore spoken, and can, therefore, do little more at present than to repeat ourselves. Not only the philosophy of history, but geology, geography, and astronomy, are discussed, at reasonable length, in the introductory chapters. Then comes a very interesting essay on physical and political geography, followed by a paper on the antediluvian and patriarchal ages. To this succeeds the history of Asia and Africa, from the earliest period to the present time. Then succeeds, in order, the history of Europe and America. In every respect this "Universal History" is to be commended as a useful compilation. For students, as well as for the general reader, it must prove highly attractive. The illustrations answer every purpose, and really illustrate the text. Although called a "history," and thereby ranked by some people with many a drowsy volume, we can assure our readers that they will scarcely find a more readable book, than this under notice. The compiler is neither dull nor tedious. He does his work briefly and clearly, and, in addition to the historical facts, gives many curious anecdotes and statements regarding the manners, customs, social life, religion, government, costume, sports, amusements and employments, of the different nations of the earth. We advise people to look at the publication. It is just the thing for the general reader, being neither deep, nor verbose, nor stupid. It is a compilation made with taste and skill, as well as with patience and labor."

Certificates.

Without professing myself a believer in all varied departments of Phrenology, a Science to which I have given little or no attention, I yet have pleasure in acknowledging that, myself and family having submitted to an examination at the hands of Mr. Persons, he gave us, and that with great readiness, as far as I can judge, a very truthful description of our characters. Conscious defects were pointed out. Those faculties which needed cultivation, and those that had been improved and developed by particular pursuits of studies were named, in cases where he could not have known what these were.

As Mr. P. professes his belief in the atonement of Christ as the only ground of acceptance with God, and in the necessity of the influences of the Holy Spirit to regenerate the soul and to enable us to improve what is defective in us, and in the hope that it may be his object to become practically acquainted with these truths himself, and to cause their influence to be felt in his teachings I trust that he will meet with success in his classes.

This is to certify that the Bearer, Wm. Persons, is deeply imbued with the spirit and doctrines of Phrenology, has attended my lectures, and read my works, that he has a first rate natural talent for prosecuting this science, that I strongly recommend him, while examining his head, and before I knew him, to follow this science as a permanent profession; that I recommend him to the public as talented and worthy of patronage, and think him calculated to do good.

Exhibitions and Lectures.

THE Undersigned proposes exhibiting the

Diorama of Uncle Tom's Cabin,

in the principal Cities, Towns, and Villages in the Northern States and Canada; and to accompany them with abundant evidence as to the truthfulness of the facts assumed by the author, in the work known by that name, which will include the recital of some most mysterious and thrilling incidents in the history of his own family. The flight of his parents for freedom—their capture, and return to slavery and their second flight; a history of their lost boys, who were stolen and sold into slavery—the death of one of them, and the redemption of the other by the purchase of himself; and the final purchase for the enormous sum of five thousand dollars.

The paintings, comprising the scenes of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," are the production of an eminent French artist, and show as large as life, and represent the most prominent scenes and characters in the work.

In order to render our labors more effectual and create more general interest and benefit, we propose the following arrangements, viz:—To give one half of the receipts to any Church or Society, or regularly appointed committee by the public, who will provide a place, secure an audience, and defray the expenses incident to the meeting.

An arrangement by which every Church or Society in the country may replenish their funds, and their pastors, or whatever other benevolent object that commends itself to public patronage.

Let such then who would help the cause, help themselves, and help us in our feeble endeavours to enlist the public ear to the cries of bleeding humanity; go at once to work, communicate immediately with us preparatory to an exhibition.

We shall not however confine ourselves to that deplorable and humiliating aspect of the colored man's case, represented in that work.

But we promise at no distant date, a new programme of very different scenes, representing not only an entirely original, but a far more hopeful aspect of the black man, than has ever been presented to the American public.

It is neither egotism, nor yet flattery, in us to say that this mode of giving instruction possesses the double merit of engaging those two most important faculties that man possesses—the mind and the sight at the same time, and making an ineffacable impression. It is not as being necessarily dependent and degraded, then that, we shall confine our exhibitions of his character.

There have been places where, and times when the black man of modern times has proven himself the patriot, the statesman, and the warrior. As such, then, let him be known to the world, that it may acknowledge it, and to our youth, that they may imitate their example and copy their virtues.

We suffer more perhaps, from false representation, than all other ills put together.

Those amongst us who have acted the part of patriot are represented to be vicious and ungovernable: and those whom the most direful and contemptible prejudices have debarred from the opportunities for higher development are represented as submissive willing underlings. Generation after generation are stamped with the same false impressions, and learn to assume it on the one hand, and regard it as a fixed inevitable fact on the other.

We are arranging a new and a very extens

DENNIS M'PHELIM'S LETTER

To Dissuade his Brother Pathrick, in Ireland from Emigrating to America.

An' so ye're for laving ould Ireland;
Just wait a bit, Pathrick, swate heart!
I've a power of the greatest news for ye,
As soon as I get a fair start.

An' first, there's the voyage ye'll be makin';
(Its crossing the dape is no play)—
There was none of our lads, save Jim Lakin,
But died several deaths by the way.

The boxes, and tubs, and old kittles,
That Tim stowed so snoogly aboord,
Have niver revived from the bating
And ixercise that they indured.

Och! had ye seen Dermont's new breeches
All drenched in the salt ocean brine,
An' his undershirts droppin' their stitches,
Ye'd think immigration less fine.

Arrah! nice it is, snug in yer shanty,
To spake o' the mountains o' goold
That wait to be had for the askin',
An' niver were counted nor toold.

But, faith, when ye get to those mountains,
'Tis nothing but valleys ye see,
Where a hen louse would live on starvation,
So dry and so empty they be.

I've got but one look at the dimonds,
An' thin they are clare out o' sight;
The praties are sunburnt and rotten,
An' the sound ones are spoilt with the blight.

Thin our mate—O, Pathrick, dear jewel!
Each separate strand o' the same
Is strong as an ould gobbler's sinews,
An' the opin-wark steak is a shame!

There's plenty of wark, but its diggin';
For the natives are slinder as laths:
If ye'll show me a railroad thay've levelled,
Or one o' these underground paths,

That lead through the hearts o' the hill-tops,
Where a native the credit desarves
Ot a tithe o' the huge botheration—
I'll work that same job at the halves!

An' ye come, bring yer shovel and pickaxe;
For the whole land o' Erin, swate Isle!
Is less than the overgrown mountain
That we now have got to unpile.

Thrue for ye! An' thin the quare natives,
Wi' legs like a starved mountain goat,
Wi' never an oil dhrap in their bodies,
Are frightened to death an' we vote!

It's a humbug—this same immigration!
At home we are poor—but ye see,
In sarving this pert Yankee nation,
The sarvants o' sarvants we be.

As I live, I've declared, in vexation,
That were I once dead, and in pace,
I'd kill myself fraely, if killin'
Could blot out our nation's disgrace!

For why should a son or a daughter
O' Ireland, the brave an' the bould,
Draw wood, or be hewers o' water,
To be paid more in kicks than in goold?

Och! an' this is a mane land to die in!
The sinner must shift as he may:
For the praste, who would gladly anint him,
Is oft a lang journey away.

To think o' these heretics singing
And prayin' about ye when dead!
For one, I'm determined while living,
To die where the mass shall be said.

O, Pat! It's yer sowl ye'll be losing!
(Yer goold is safe-lost ere ye start,)
And yer clothes and yer flesh will be laving
As soon as ye get here, swate heart!

So, list to your own brother's counsel,
An' if ye not started, go back;
Or wait—I will burn the whole lether,
And come home and help ye unpack.

Inundations in France.

The Constitutionnel has a most detailed article upon the perpetual recurrence of inundations in France; upon the grievous harm done by them to commerce, industry, and, above all, to agriculture; upon the incalculable expenses entailed by them; and upon the possibility of preventing them. This year the country will have sadly suffered from the floods, after having, as we know, so grievously suffered in its agricultural hopes from other causes. In June, the flooding of the Garonne laid waste whole districts of the most fertile land, and now the basin of the Rhone is threatened by partial floods, which have already begun to devastate the departments upon the left bank; whilst the torrential rains that have fallen in the department of the Hautre Loire cause the most dismal apprehensions, lest that last-mentioned treacherous river should overflow its bed.

In the face of this constantly menacing state of things M. Valserres, the clever writer of the article, tells us what may be looked upon as the more or less immediate causes of the evil, and consequently whence may come the direct or indirect means of finding for it a cure. Inundations, it appears, in France, have nearly all the same source; the un-wooding of the plains and low rising grounds, and the un-turfing of the high mountains, from whose tops all forests have disappeared. As we all know, wooden lands are what is called favourable to rain, and the conditions of moisture contained in forests, pasture lands, and thick grass meadows attract perpetually the atmospheric vapours condensed in clouds, which dissolve in rain, and are incessantly, but gently, watering the soil. Where these attractions are wanting, moderate rain is unfrequent, but an anormal quantity of aqueous vapour takes refuge in the upper atmosphere; and the consequences are storms of all kinds, and torrential rains, the various precursors, in short of inevitable inundation. A curious practical proof of this theory, approved by science, is to be found in the fact that, since the work of re-wooding lands has been carried on in Egypt, the frequent but moderate rains hitherto unknown in that country, have made their re-appearance, to the unspeakable surprise of the indigenous population. Now, apropos to the Rhone, we must see what are the lands which command, as it were, its course, and also what are those which play the same part with regard to the Garonne and the Loire. We find ruling, as may be said, over the latter the Pyrenees, and higher mountains of Auvergne, whilst the former is, in fact, the slave of the Gallo-Swiss Alps. A few words will explain: the Gallo-Swiss or Pastoral Alps, as they are called, are the chief source of food for the sheep flocks of Provence. The communes possessing pasture grounds on these summits receive per head of sheep for grazing a price which varies from 50 cents to one franc; and, in order to increase their revenues, they let out their land to quadruple the number of animals that it is capable of nourishing. Before the middle of the season all the herbage is cropped, and then, in order not to die of hunger, the flocks begin to devour the roots of the grass, thus turning up and laying bare the turf covering of the mountain sides. Deprived of the network of the roots, which served to keep the mould together and compact, and trampled to dust by the small sharp foot of the sheep, the loose soil of course ceases to offer any resistance, and is swept away by the first fall of rain. The next thing which happens is the cracking of the ground, which, instead of absorbing the atmospheric vapours, yields them first a narrow and superficial passage—soon, however a larger, deeper, and more direct one. Thus torrents are formed, and when comes a heavy shower even, a compact body of water is precipitated from the heights of the mountains into the plains; where carying with it all it has found upon its way, it covers the labours of cultivation in the fields with gravel, sand, weeds, stones, and whatever may most embarrass an agriculturist. Nor is this all; the torrent sweeps across the fields and plains, making directly for the Rhone, and raising the level of the river by the suplementary waters it empties into its own. The same thing happens to the Loire and its chief affluent, the Allier. The Pyrenees and the Cevennes are to these rivers what the Alps are to the Rhone, and the destruction of the pasture grounds by too numerous flocks fathers the fearful inundations which, often from one day to the other, devastate whole provinces of France. The suddenness with which the Loire rises is something quite extraordinary. In 1846 the official report states the rise to have been in the ratio of 1 metre 20 centim. an hour. At low water the Loire runs at the rate of 32 cubic metres of water a second. In rainy weather, and when it is likely to swell, it runs at the rate of from 8000 to 10,000 cubic metres,—that is, increase of 312 times its volume. Ten millions of francs a year is the average estimate usually made of the damage occasioned to agriculture by these floodings; but, evidently, as Mr. Valserres observes, this is immensely too small an estimate, and is based upon the 10 (odd) millions of francs furnished in 1840, by subscription and by government, to the victims. The official documents, on the contrary, give a proof of damage done to the amount of 72,774,072 francs. In 1846, again, the reparations effected by the state in roads, bridges, &c., cost alone more than 14 millions; so that we see France exposed to what if the costs are averaged, must come at least to a loss of 18 or 20 millions of francs a year, besides the frightful loss of life incurred, and the incalculable amount of private and often irreparable ruin. At the end of his article of five columns, Mr. Valserres says it is a duty to examine into every possible means of preventing these constant calamities, and promise shortly the explanation of his theories upon the matter.

News Direct from Russia.

Col. Tal. P. Shaffner, who was a passenger by the Atlantic, and has travelled direct from St. Petersburg, has favored us with some interesting information concerning the present condition of Russia, her resources, and the spirit which animates her people in this, the third year of the war. Col. Shaffner has spent much of his time in Russia, and, naturally enough, his predilections are strongly in favor of that power in its contest with the Empires of the West. His account, therefore, will be considered all the more valuable as coming from a purely Russian source, and may be contrasted with the views and reports that from time to time appear in the Anglo French journals. Col. Shaffner has had every facility to investigate the condition of Russia, and his business connection in St. Petersburg has rendered him familiar with the opinions of its inhabitants on the war and its incidents. Nor is his knowledge confined to St. Petersburg alone; for he has recently travelled over a large portion of the Empire. With this preface, we publish the information we have acquired from him, in the following form.

FINANCIAL CONDITION OF RUSSIA—MONEY PLENTIFUL.

Perhaps there are not half a dozen persons in the Russian Empire who, at the present moment, thoroughly understand its financial condition; and a temporary resident, who wishes to discover what effect the war has had upon its resources, can only form an opinion on this subject from what he sees. In Moscow, St. Petersburg, and other large cities, there is nothing to induce the supposition that the life-blood of the country was being drained by an exhausting war. Gold and silver continue plentiful, and are freely used in the ordinary transactions of every-day life. A merchant in his store will change a bank note into coin with as much readiness as he would in the city of New York. Brokers charge two per cent. to change notes of large amount into gold, but even this is regarded as an Israelitish transaction. In the grand and luxuriant extravagance of the noble, two years' war has made no sensible difference; in the cottage of the serf, there is yet no appearance of want, no mutterings of complaint. Merchandise and goods have not increased in value; and champagne, to illustrate by example, can be bought in St. Petersburg cheaper than Jersey cider is sold in New York. Copper is the only article has increased in value, and this is attributable to another cause than that of the war. The erection of public and private buildings goes on; churches are built as usual, and vast sums of money have within a few months been lavished on the additions to the palace of Peterhoff. It may be true that shipping merchants and others connected with foreign trade have been ruined, but it is also true that the resources of the country are becoming more rapidly developed than could have been possible in time of peace; manufactories are springing up throughout the country; and men find in them an occupation, and a recompense for what they have lost.

The levies for the war do not injure the commercial and agricultural interests of the country. Of men there are plenty! of gold there is abundance; and of wheat there is more than enough for the wants of all. The people feel themselves secure within their territory. They do not fear that its resources will be easily exhausted, and, therefore, they have made up their minds that there is

A LONG, LONG WAR AHEAD.

The Russians seem to admit and believe that France and England are two powerful nations, whose pride is thoroughly engaged in this contest. They, too, are proud. They would never submit any dishonorable treaty. They would never yield one acre of land, or consent to pay the expenses of the war for the sake of peace, and they give their enemy credit for similar determination. Hence the impression prevails that the war will be greatly prolonged—that years will elapse before it can be brought to a statisfactory termination. To this the Russian people seem to have made up their minds. They trust in the gigantic resources of their country. Its immense extent precludes the idea of a successful invasion; and prestige goes far to conform this prevailing impression. As in the cases of Napoleon and Charles XII., where transitory triumphs at the commencement only insured destruction and disaster at the end—so now, the Russians confidently expect, that, if the Allies attempt to penetrate their empire, they will certainly meet with ruin and defeat. Pride will never allow them to abandon the Crimea, though its conquest by the Allies would enable the Czar to concentrate his forces and multiply his powers of resistance. An example of this peculiar trait in the Russian character may be found in the late attack upon Kinburn at the mouth of the Dneiper. This fortress, which could not even boast of stone fortifications, was mounted with old Turkish guns, whose range did not exceed four hundred yards. Yet, when a powerful fleet of the Allies appeared before it, the garrison, in very obstinacy, held out during two days' bombardment; and when the place was manifestly doomed, the Governor, rather than yield, strove to light the mine, and destroy both friend and foe in one common ruin. It is against men who believe themselves invincible, and who, when beaten, know it not, that the soldiers of France and England are now fighting. The Russian never yields: in defeat he is more terrible than in success, for in the former case he is trebly nerved by despair, and a thirst for revenge. Pride is the ruling national trait, and that pride calls loudly for a continuance of the war. The religious feeling, which first summoned the nation to arms, burns fiercely still, and the principle that the Czar has the right of protectorate over the Greek subjects of the Porte will never be voluntarily abandoned.

THE FOUNDRIES OF ST. PETERSBURG—GREAT STORES OF IRON.

Throughout the whole of the Russian empire a traveller sees little else than vast preparations going on for the continuance of the war. Within a short distance from St. Petersburg there are three foundries for cannon. One, in the capital, turns out sixty brass field pieces of different sizes per week; and they were all considered complete in every particular by the American officers who lately visited the place. The Colpin works turn out eighty cannon, and those of Petrozavodsk, [which are connected by the river navigation with St. Petersburg,] over a hundred every week. This is exclusive of the immense foundries in Russia south of Moscow. The country around the works of Petrozavodsk is filled with iron, and the labor of extracting it goes on unceasingly. And in this connection, it may be noticed how useless was the order of the British Government prohibiting the exportation of iron when Russian mines can yield it in greater quantities than is needed. Within the city of St. Petersburg, at this day, iron, belonging to private merchants, can be seen in vast quantities, rusting where it stands.

THE FALL OF SEBASTOPOL.

The news of the fall of Southern Sebastopol was received in St. Petersburg without any usual emotion. It had long been expected as a crisis which must sooner or later take place. This, indeed, very clearly appeared, by the decisive way in which Gortschakoff abandoned the city immediately after the capture of the Malakhoff. There are some Russian views in regard to this great assault which are interesting, and show that the people are willing to estimate correctly and fairly the courage and perseverance of their enemy. Among them is the COMPARATIVE BRAVERY OF THE BRITISH AND FRENCH.

The Russians say that the British press, and particularly the London Times, has failed to do justice to the bravery of the English soldiers at the Redan. Around the Malakhoff the ground was composed of soft earth, and the approaches were easily made to its very base. The French, therefore, had no distance to traverse, and, consequently, no fire to undergo previous to their hand to hand contest with the Russians. The space before the Redan was, on the contrary, composed of rock, and the British were unable to make their approaches like the French. At the assault they were, in consequence, exposed for some time to a heavy fire from three tiers of guns, converging at each end of the Redan; and yet in the face of this terrible cannonade, they stood their ground for two hours. Russian officers who witnessed the scene, give greater credit to the British on this occasion than they do the French, whose success was chiefly owing to the suddenness with which they effected their object.

CONTINUANCE OF RUSSIAN RULE IN THE CRIMEA.

To have been able to retain the city of Sebastopol would undoubtedly have gratified the pride of the Russian people, but its loss is not regarded as a misfortune, for it is believed that Gortschakoff can hold the North Forts against any force that the Allies can bring against him. Here too, the Russian Government has established a foundry which formerly supplied the Malakhoff with guns as fast as they were required, and recast the balls that fell in such showers from the allied batteries. Thus, it will be seen, that Gortschakoff, is not more likely to lack war material now than he was before the fall of the City. As to provisions and supplies for his army, it is perfectly understood that he is already provided for the ensuing Winter. It has been frequently asserted by the British Press, and has generally been believed, that the waggon communication between the interior of Russia and the Crimea is no longer possible. This is said to be incorrect;—for, waggons in Summer and sledges in Winter, laden with provisions, travel by thousands to Perekop, whence they return laden with salt. But be the actual condition of affairs in the Crimea as it may, the belief prevails among the masses of the Russian people that the peninsula will not fall into the hands of the Allies. The preparations going on now are on an enormous scale. Old cannon are being replaced by new, and, through the exertions of that distinguished Engineer, General Tottleben, the defences of Nicolaieff (the great arsenal of Southern Russia) have been rendered completely impregnable either against a land or a sea attack.

Dreadful Explosion in the Crimea.

Lord Panmure has received the following telegraphic despatch from General Sir William Codrington, dated 16th November:—

A very heavy explosion of a store of powder at the French Seige train took place about 3 p. m. yesterday. It communicated fire to our siege train close to it, where there is no powder, but some naval live shells, most of which were removed: but the loss of life and damage done is considerable.

The great explosion threw shell over the camp of our siege train, the huts of the 1st brigade being entirely destroyed, but not by fire.

All the officers and men were on the spot at once, and worked with good-will and energy, and I saw all safe when I quitted at 7 p. m.

Killed, Deputy-Assistant Commissary Yellow, R.A., and 21 non-commissioned officers and men.

Wounded: Lieut. Dawson, R.A., lost his leg below the knee; Lieut. Roberts, dangerously in the arm; Lieut. Eccles, and Assistant-Surgeon Reade, 2nd battalion rifle brigade, slightly; 116 non-commisioned officers and men, of whom 47 slightly.

The French Minister of War has received the following despatch from Marshal Pelissier, dated Sebastopol, Nov. 16th, p. m.:—

"Our park of artillery, near Inkermann, was yesterday partly destroyed, by the explosion of magazines, containing together 30,000 kilogrammes of powder 600,000 cartridges, 300 charged shells and other projectiles. The ignited materials, hurled to a distance, caused a violent conflagration in the English park next to ours, and there also a partial explosion took place. The explosion occurred at four o'clock, and by six o'clock the French and English workmen were masters of the fire. Our lost consists of 30 killed, including two officers, and some 100 wounded, among whom are 10 officers. I believe the loss of our Allies is about the same as our own. It is a very lamentable accident, but our stores are so considerable, that the resources of the army are not in the slightest degree affected by it."

Iron Vessels as Men-of-War.

In one of our notices on the magnificent screw steamer Oneida, built by Messrs. John Scott & Sons of Greenock, we mentioned that she had been constructed of unusual strength, and we learn from the despatch of Lord George Paget respecting operations against the Russians near Eupatoria, on 22d October, that this has successfully withstood the most severe test. The Oneida accompanied that expedition, and Capt. Hamilton of the Diamond frigate, of 36 guns, having found that his vessel being a sailing one, could not co-operate with the land forces so satisfactorily as he desired, put her guns and men on board of the Oneida, from which he fired on the flanks and advanced pickets of the enemy. This is the first instance on record of broadsides of heavy artillery being fired from an iron vessel. Two other screw steamers well known at this port, viz., Messrs G. & J. Burns' Zebra, built by Messrs. Craid & Co., and Messrs. M'Kean & M'Larity's Charity, were employed as "dummy" men-of-war to blockade the mouth of the Bug.—Greenock Advertiser.

The Canadian Fleet.

We learn that one of the steamers belonging to the Canadain Ocean Steamship Company, the Onedia, has done good service, as a man-of-war, in the Crimea. The following extract relates the particulars of the exploit of this fine vessel, which is owned entirely by Montreal merchants.

The Oneida was launched in April last, and designed to run between this port and Liverpool, and has been about six months in the service of the Transport Board.

Extract from a letter from Captain Morton to the Liverpool Agents of the ship, dated Off Balaklava, Oct. 26.

"The Oneida had rather a naval exploit on this occasion. Capt. Baily Hamilton, of H. M. frigate Diamond, boarded us the day the troops went out and asked me as a favour if I would place the Oneida at his disposal to harrass the enemy. I volunteered, he taking the responsibility. We went alongside the frigate, and took on board from her four 32-pounder guns with fifty rounds of shot, shells, &c., and hands to work the guns, and away we steamed along the shore. The day beautifully fine and the sea as smooth as glass. Keeping as close in as we could with perfect safety, we were soon in the neighbourhood of the contending armies. We could distinguish them distinctly with the naked eye from our deck. There was some slight skirmishing, and finally the Allies drove the enemy out of the village and immediately set it on fire. The Russians withdrew under cover of the smoke. Our heavy guns were brought to bear upon them, which occasioned some confusion in thier ranks. Evening coming on we steamed off shore, and anchored in five fathoms water for the night, about three miles from the beach. The following morning, as soon as the mist cleared off the land, we were surprised to see the enemy drawn up in "battle array," about a mile in front of the allied army. We stood in shore to 5 fathoms water and saw a few shots exchanged. We again opened fire on the enemy with our own 18-pounders, and the 32-pounders from the frigate—the latter evidently annoying them—they soon withdrew without coming to a general action. The Allies returned to Eupatoria, along the beach, the Oneida covering their flank on the march.

"Enclosed, I send you a copy of an extract from Captain Hamilton's letter to Admiral Freemantle, which speaks favorably of the Oneida."

Extract of a letter from Captain Hamilton, Senior Officer, Eupatoria, to Rear-Admiral Chas. H. Freemantle:—

"The arming and making use of a hired steam-transport in actual service being done, I believe, for the first time and on my own responsibility, I would add that on my suggesting the experiment to Capt. Morton, the master of the Oneida, he at once cheerfully volunteered to place his fine ship in any position I thought fit—the whole of the officers and crew likewise volunteering in the same ready manner, and, indeed, working their own 18-pounders. And I think Captain Morton and his company deserve great praise for their conduct. After driving the enemy out of the village of Sale, and destroying it, the allied army returned this afternoon to Eupatoria."

Independence.

We believe it was Doctor Johnson who said that patriotism was generally the last refuge of a vagabond. The old lexicographer, however, when he used the deprecatory expression, probably attached to his definition of the term, the sham love of country which was in vogue in his time. Did Doctor Samuel Johnson live in Canada to-day, he would probably define "independence," in the acceptation of the term by its professors, to be a license for abusing government and its individual members. Your men who are violently in opposition, and your journalists who sail in the same boat, never cease to jabber of their independence; they prate so continually of it, indeed, that people are beginning to be nauseated by this eternal self-laudation. Mackenzie tried the game first, and his budget of political and polemical theories went up in flying style, until its over inflation led to a natural sequence, and the contents were nearly instrumental in killing the whilom owner. Since then, however, the independent fragments having been pelted at every successive government, have done much to keep the little gentleman before the party of his political kidney, as the personification of everything that is free and disinterested. Everybody knows what the independent ticket has done for Mr. George Brown; without the steady ability or patience for detail necessary to the legislative assistant, that gentleman had cunning enough to see the most popular course, at least for him, and vigor sufficient to pursue it. His reflection, the Globe, took to the independent tone at the same time, and has done wonders ever since; it has supported all manners of levelling and fanaticism, catering to the prejudices of the masses of the people, showing a spirit of servility to those whose favor it asked, and abusive bullying towards its opponents, which would have done credit to the meanest print of Holywell Street. And this, forsooth, the Globe calls independence. Verily the World must have been the Globe's prototype; their licentiousness bear the same similarity as the signification of their names; then let the latter beware of the same fate.

The Hamilton journalist, whose ambitions to float his Banner over the Globe, makes a pretty good thing of the independent dodge. But the Banner has not the knack of heaping on abuse in the style of his more experienced Toronto neighbor; the imagery and Bombastes Furioso style is, in a great measure, lost upon his peculiar class of readers, while at the same time it certainly lets the cat out of the bag, and makes one believe that the editor had his tongue in his cheek while he was indulging in his highest flights of poetic fancy.

Not a hundred miles from London, however, we have the rarest disciple of the independent policy, to be found among all the Opposition press fry of the country. This is the best government we can have, saith the oracle in one paper; we agree also to the manner in which it faces the Opposition music, says the same journal; the time has not come yet, for us to ascertain ministers' intentions, but, nevertheless, by all manner, rout the government, and of course, place in power the Clear Grits. Straightway, then, this consistent organ proceeds "to blow" at ministers in his own little penny whistle strain, thinking, poor soul, that his big brothers having become so notorious by their loud thunder his small beer must pass off as the genuine stuff.

So long as a journalist caters to the prejudices of its party, flatters the ultraism of its supporters, and is careful not to seek any aid from men who have held different views when different questions were on the tapis, he can get along without endangering his popularity among his patrons. All is an even course then, and, if he be a Radical, he can vilify the administration for not being Grittish enough, while with a Tory, the opposite tactics are equally safe. It is when a journalist attempts to lead public opinion, that he treads upon dangerous ground, and with all due deference to the monopolisers of the term, we believe, therein lies the real independence. We hope we shall not be thought egotistical by a reference to a late apt illustration of our meaning. It will be remembered that we lately suggested that a common course of political action should, in future, be adopted by the Conservatives and Moderate Reformers of this district. And when the question was raised, we contended that it would be the interest of the latter to support the former at the polls, in opposition to the Clear Grits, and thus to maintain the policy which they both mutually professed. And in this position we are still firm, without the least intention of furthering the views of any man, but determined to support those parties whose antecedents go to show them likely to be staunch against a rabid spirit of Clear Gritism. How was our bold proposition for this union met by our generous brethren of the press? Why one set up a shout of "fossil," and spoke of false pretences, &c., while the other bawled out that we were a Radical, and what not. Oh, what a fine time to make capital, and tell our party that we were false to them, and persuade the public that the recruiter for a common cause was a deserter under false colors! Our advocacy of the ministry's course is one instance, and our strictures upon it in another was alluded to in order to serve the purpose of our emulous neighbors, but the fact of this journal not being in receipt of one shilling's worth of governmental patronage was carefully kept out of sight. And such is the storm which every newspaper may expect upon its devoted head, when it has the independence to judge measures by their own merits, and to recommend the obliteration of past asperities in the advocacy of a mutal policy. That every question before the country at present should be treated according to sound and Moderate Conservative principles, we firmly believe, but as we have sufficient self-respect to prevent us from becoming a political panderer, we do not substitute unmeaning cries or impracticable demands for what we conceive to be the dictates of plain common sense. That the opposite and more violent mode, if supported with the necessary abuse of public men, will gain its ephemeral supporters, we do not doubt, but that the maxim of honesty being the best policy will be found the most enduring, and self-sustaining course, we feel firmly assured.—Prototype.

The Passmore Williamson Case.

INTERFERENCE OF THE PRESIDENT—A REMARKABLE STATEMENT.—A correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette writes from Pittsburg that, when the case of Passmore Williamson was argued before the Supreme Court, last Summer, at Bedford, on motion to bring Williamson out on a writ of habeas corpus, three of the Judges (Messrs Lowrie, Woodward and Knox) were in favour of granting the writ, and two (Messrs. Black and Lewis) opposed it. When the Court reassembled in Philadelphia, Judge Kane and his friends had an interview with the Judges, and communicated to them the fact that the President had ordered the United States Marshal, in case the Court should direct the writ to issue, to remove Williamson from Moyamensing to a United States receiving ship, and defend him there, with United States marines and soldiers, against any force the State might send to take him. The question presented to our Judges was, whether it was prudent to risk the threatened collision? I am sorry to say that they thought it was not. They had not the nerve to stand up for State Rights. Judges Lowrie and Woodward changed their opinions, and the writ of habeas corpus was not issued. The threat—for it was a threat—should have been an incentive to its issue, instead of the pusillanimous course adopted; for the question of State Rights has got to be settled, and this was the opportunity needed. Is this true? If it is not, the Honourable Judges owe it to themselves explicitly and positively to contradict it. The people of this Commonwealth are lenient to mistakes and errors, when they are satisfied they are inadvertently and honestly committed. But they make no apology, and accept of no excuse, for wrong acts committed under influence of promises, fears or threats. We should like to know if President Pierce had the effrontery and the audacity to threaten "the United States Marshal, in case the Court should direct the writ to issue, should be ordered to remove Williamson from Moyamensing to a United States receiving ship, and defend him there, against any force the State might send to take him." Is this true? That's what we want to know! And is it true that Judges Woodward and Lowrie cowed before this threat and changed their minds? That's what we want especially to know!—Lancaster (Pa.) Ind. Whig.

Williamson vs. Kane.

The Chester (Pa.) Republican informs us that in the case of Passmore Williamson vs. John K. Kane, Joseph J. Lewis, Esq., the plaintiff's counsel, has filed a declaration, claiming damages to the amount of fifty thousand dollars. In all probability, the case will go upon the trial list for the February term. The Republican understands that an effort will be made to have a special Act of Assembly passed to remove the trial to Philadelphia. That the Legislature would probably pass an act of this kind, may be true, but will Governer Pollock sanction it? The Republican thinks not. There is no County in the Commonwealth where a more impartial and fair trial could be had than in Delaware County.—Anti-Slavery Standard.

A FUGITIVE CASE.—Quite an excitement was caused in the lower part of the city on Monday, by an attempt to capture an alleged female fugitive from slavery. The woman is a very light and good-looking mulatto. The claimant alleged that she escaped from him about a year ago. Her friends say that she has been living at least five years in Cincinnati, and can prove that she is a free woman. While the claimant was put on the wrong scent, the woman was carried to parts unknown; after which the excitement subsided. —Cincinnati Columbian, 21st ult.

THE UNDERGROUND RAILROAD.—A Good Business.—We understand that the train on this road arrived yesterday with sixteen passengers, all in good condition. The number which took the cars at starting was twenty-one. Five of them, however, stopped at way stations. We were glad to learn that the Underground Road is doing a large and safe business. It carries, in the course of a twelvemonth, large numbers from slavery to freedom, from oppression to liberty. Those who arrived here yesterday have been furnished with through tickets. All pursuit of them by slaveholders or sympathizers will be unavailing. They are beyond the reach of further oppression.—New Bedford Standard, 23d ult.

ANOTHER STAMPEDE.—The Richmond Whig states that eleven slaves ran away from their owners in that city on Saturday night last. Seven of the eleven belonged to Mrs. Susan L. Hatcher.

Runaway Slaves Recaptured—Arrest of a Sea Captain and Mate.

The Norfolk (Va.) Herald of the 24th ult. has the following:

"Early yesterday morning we received information that a schooner had been driven ashore in Princess Anne County with fugitive slaves on board, and shortly after we had the satisfaction of seeing the captain and mate of the schooner, who had been brought up to this city and lodged in jail for safe keeping. It appears that the schooner Mary Ann Elizabeth, of Baltimore, commanded by Wm. Lambden, of Wilmington, Del., assisted by Benjamin Collins, of Port Norris, N. J., as mate, left this port on Wednesday last, bound for Philadelphia. During the gale of that night the vessel was driven ashore about five miles from Cape Henry, with the loss of some of her sails and rigging, and in the morning it was discovered that she had on board several negroes, whose owners were known to reside in this city. The captain had in his possession $125, which the negroes said they had paid him for their passage to Philadelphia. The captain, however, says that the slaves were on board without his knowledge; that he went forward on Wednesday evening and discovered a chip under the forecastle hatch; that he lifted it up and discovered the slaves stowed away in the forecastle; that he called the mate's attention to the fact, who was as much astonished as himself; that the money was then taken from the negroes and the schooner put about for Norfolk, but owing to the gale of wind blowing at the time it was found impracticable, and that it was then determined to run the schooner ashore, which was accordingly done. It is hardly probable, however, that two men should undertake to navigate a schooner to Philadelphia, and still less so that five negroes should have taken possession of the forecastle, without the knowledge of either captain or mate. The probability is, that if the severe gale of Wednesday night had not occurred, nothing more would have been heard of the slaves, and we do most earnestly hope that when this case comes up for trial, some clue may be obtained which will lead to the discovery of the president, directors and agents of the Underground Railroad from Norfolk. The slaves —two men, two women and one child—are still in safe keeping in Princess Anne County, and belong, as we learn, to Messrs. Duncan Robertson, C. H. Shield and Mrs. Shepherd."

Another Delay.

☞ Our readers will please bear with the delay occasioned by not getting the present number of the paper at the usual time, as it was altogether impossible for us to get paper in time to get out our regular issue. Our order for a supply had been given, and the merchant had promptly responded to the same, by confiding to Trowbridge & Co., of Detroit, the quantity needed; but through carelessness, or forgetfulness, they suffered it to remain at the warehouse, and after writing, telegraphing, enquiring of the gentlemanly agents, and attachees of the Express Company, and of the Great Western Road at this place, and at Windsor, we were obliged to go to Detroit, after one week of perplexing effort and "fussing," and bring it ourselves. There is no loss of papers to subscribers, the same number will reach them in a year; but they have the disappointment of not getting the expected news, and we have a clear loss in pounds and shillings. Wisdom and her Children.

If wisdom is the use of the best means to attain certain ends; then most beautifully is the wisdom of God seen in his adaptation of means to accomplish his purposes. If God is immutable, then, the development of such adaptation must constitute virtually his Providential Government. How strikingly does such a truth appear, in God's giving existence to, and the preparation of a man for every age and its reforms! As Jacob had a Joseph,—so his children had a Moses. If the Philistines had a Goliath,—so Israel had a David. If the American Colonies had a despotic George,—they had also a democratic Washington. If Europe had a Napoleon the I,—she had her Wellington too. If Turkey has a foe, in the Russian Czar,—so she has a friend, in the British Queen. And, mark! AS THE AMERICAN SLAVE HAS A WHITE CAPTOR,—SO HE HAS A BLACK DELIVERER! We speak of the past and future, as present. However, there may be the very man among us, and we know him not, as the Saviour was among the Jews, and they knew him not. In connection with this subject, we have often thought of a somewhat uncommon, and very eccentric man, with whom we are acquainted, and of his covenant with his God, and with his soul, and of his present course of procedure, in obscurity, and as to what will be his ultimate earthly career. He of whom we write, is a man of the Anglo-African kind, and a Virginian by birth. Of his parents, we know nothing, but what he relates. He had been deprived of their influence and culture from his youth up. We made his acquaintance some years ago, at Richmond, as a slave, and body servant of a distinguished planter. He was then in the prime of life. He is a little beyond the medium size—very good looking, though not really pretty. He is of dignified air, and reminds one of the Joshua, of Americans, the Ajax of the Seminole notoriety! This man had witnessed and experienced, personally, the horrors of American Slavery. He had seen the exhausting toil,—scanty fare, and personal abuse of his parents. He had heard them narrate their sad suffering in slavery, and inhuman wrongs in the house of bondage. He had marked the inexpressible anguish of their spirits, as they exhorted each other to resignation and fortitude in their hopeless condition; and prayed to God, that he would soon move them to that place, "where the wicked cease to trouble and the weary are at rest." He remembered, too, when they were denuded and severely castigated for daring to leave the plantation, without permission, on the Lord's Day, and for going to the house of God; and also, that for the same so-called offence, they had been seized and sold from each other, and him forever. Their sad and last look at him, and each other, as they parted in chains, to different parts of the South, seemed painted indelibly upon the canvass of his conscience. Their bitter and heart-rending wail, as they faded from his view, behind the slave driver's wagon, seemed still to ring in his ear. Their wrongs, and those of others, from American tyrants, "had grown with his growth, and strengthened with his strength," until he seemed maddened and driven to perfect desperation. We have heard him speak of these things, and his eyes would flash lightning—his tongue utter threats of vengeance as terrible as thunder—and with teeth clinched, and up-lifted arms, he would swear, that unless death paralised them, that they should deal to their tyrants their just desert. He had been himself awfully whipped,—well nigh starved to death, imprisoned, and several times sold; but his sufferings seemed to be lost sight of, in view of those of others;—indeed, the wrongs of his race affected him so, that his appearance was such, as to make us shudder, in anticipation of his revengeful blow! He relates: "when I was a youth, of seventeen years, the night after my parents were sold and gone from me forever, I prayed, for I had never prayed before. I asked God to take my poor father and mother out of the world. I asked him to save me from their fate, and to give me my liberty. I told him, if he would, that I would serve him all my life. And I vowed also, to my own soul: "I said, soul, you shall be satisfied with the blood of your fathers enemies, if ever I get free or have a chance! Reader, God heard that prayer! And, we have learned, that it is partly answered! And it may be, that, it will be wholly so, in time to come. It is said, that "prayer is the motion of a hidden fire," if so—

It shakes creation by its will,
And warms us, for the strife;
It burns to God, the incense still,
And freely sacrifices life.

We said, that the prayer was partly answered. Well, and so it is; for God has given that man his liberty, and he is now in the enjoyment of it, in a free country, and though he is obscure, yet he is adhering to the conditions of that solemn covenant made when he was a slave,—believing that one "had better not vow, and to vow and not pay." A single impression has often made a man a scourger of his country and a terror to his race. Who knows what slavery's impression will make of this man? We have heard him relate a dream, he once had, and it made our very blood run cold. He dreamed that war was declared between two nations, and that he was commanding chief of the army of one—they met in mortal combat, and that he was victorious—taking captive the leader of the opposing army—and instead of having him chained to his chariot's-wheel, and dragging him in triumph through the conquered Province, he had his heart cut out—put on a spear, and carried as a trophy before him! We doubt within Constantine's Crescent, or Napoleon's Star was more potent even, than will be that heart, should he ever have a chance like this. We have reason to know, that the hero of our story, in his obscurity is carefully preparing himself with information of his enemy's country's ins and outs, and studying well the characters of its multifarious inhabitants, and waiting patiently for the coming hour, when the blacks of America—like the blacks of Hayti, shall strike for their freedom and the right: AND MAY GOD SPEED THE DAY! True, it will be an awful day, should our friend ever have an opportunity to fulfill the terrible condition of his covenant with his soul! But earth and heaven have often witnessed such a day—with approval;—a day when men do deeds for God and man, and purely defend the right; and we doubt but little, but they must witness such again, when the colored Americans shall do their duty. We are proud to let the world know that we have in America, men who were even slaves, as well as others, in exile, as noble Patriots, as ever Hungary, or Italy can boast of, and who will be, to history or fame, as distinguished, should Providence offer them the chance. Differ with us, who may in this matter, still, we hope the day is not distant, when every county of the Southern States of the American Union, may have a "General Nat,"—every state a Dessalines,—and the whole South, another HANNIBAL! We know there are (some would-be statesmen) colored men of the United States, who in their public speeches for popularity's sake, say, "I would sooner wear the chains,"—but alas, 'tis not themselves—'tis hypocrasy—a lie;—than deal such deserved blows at the tyrant's life!—

Let such hide from their race,
And flee the gaze of God—
As enemies of rationality!

Thanks to heaven the day of universal liberty dawns, and the slave is preparing to strike for his freedom—to strike for his birthright, and the main element of his immortality. Let the beacon be lighted upon the heights of the world's conscience, to warn it of the woe that awaits it without resistance to the tyrant's rule. Let this slave buckle on the harness, and go forth to the campaign for freedom or the grave. It is time for the oppressor to know, that the slave is a man, and if need so require, let the weapons of death teach him what he would not learn without them, and in this righteous work may the "weak be as David, and David as the Angel of the Lord," and the obscure general come forth, and lead his people on to victory!

The Coming Election and the next Member for Kent.

We understand that Col. John Prince, of Essex, intends to come forward for the suffrages of the electors of Kent, to represent them in the Provincial Parliament. Let us say, a word in time, and especially to the Colored Electors of Kent, who are many. Woeful will be the day to the colored inhabitants of this Province, should the Conservative party of the country go down. We don't say, that you should endorse all its doings. But the party—the party as a whole, must be sustained, or ruin, yes, utter ruin to you will follow! The reformation of the Reformers—many, is annexation to the United States! Your enemies, in this country and the United States too, are very anxious to have the constitution of the American Union spread its liberal—Democratic, liberty-loving, and righteous spirit of equality and brotherhood (?) over Canada, and to bring with it its well fed bloodhounds, and hell-deserving Marshals, to run down every colored person, whom a tyrant might see fit to claim as his property, and take him back to slavery! Don't forget, too, that there are men—commercial men, &c., in the Imperial, as well as in the Provincial Parliament, who are ready to aid in this matter! Money sent our forefathers into the American hell, and money will do it again. We have reason to believe, there are already not a few slaveholders IN CANADA! But more of this when the time comes for it. Col. Prince is too well known for us to say much of him, as our representative. He is quite well termed "The English Gentleman." There is too much of the man about him, to stoop to little things, like many of the half-soul demagogues. He is a true patriot, though not entirely far from the influence of his neighbors. He is thoroughly hated by the yankees, and so much says well for any statesman in Canada. If he makes his appearance, as a candidate, we shall sustain him as a true Patriot and Conservative, should he announce himself as true as such, at the coming day, and we hope the friends of "the Provincial Freeman," throughout this country, will do likewise. The Freeman will stand by the old veteran, who has done his country so much distinguished service—the brave old man—who deserves the highest honors his country can give him! Brethren of Kent, don't forget COL. JOHN PRINCE of ESSEX, is the man for the crisis in Canada!

We say so much, though we are aware, that there is a strong desire to bring forward our distinguished fellow-town's man, James Smith, Esqr., of Camden. Mr. Smith, was our choice too! We have had several interviews with one of our principal citizens, respecting the bringing of Mr. Smith forward, &c. We have reason to believe that Mr. Smith, is in a state of transition, and is becoming all right. We don't know that Mr. Smith is aware of a desire to bring him forward. We say so, because it is due to him. Mr. Smith is not so well known as Col. Prince, though equally worthy, and hence would not be so available. The available ness is the only reason why we change our position in the case. But should it so turn out, as doubtless it may, that Col. Prince should not come forward—then, Mr. JAMES SMITH, of Camden is the man! It is due to the very soul of Kent—the farmers—that they should be represented at some time, in Parliament from their numbers—and such would Mr. Smith be. It is true, also, however, that Mr. Smith has served his country faithfully, and with honor to it and himself, for a number of years, as a public servant. He knows our wants, and we believe, he would try to have them supplied as far as possible. We hope the reported transition of Mr. Smith is true, and that either at the next, or some future election, we may have the honor of sustaining him as the Conservative candidate for Parliament, from Kent, and so may we all, who are true to our God, our Queen, and our country!

Colored Municipal Voters.

☞ It is now time, for Colored Municipal Voters of Kent, &c., to rally and fix upon the proper candidates for their suffrage. We hope there will be union among us, in putting deserving persons in office. Don't forget, our enemies are wide awake, and seeking to divide us if possible; and especially where we have the balance of power. The old adage is a good one, for us just now—"United WE STAND—divided, WE FALL!"

Amherstburg, and Emigration thereto—Former and Present Relation of the Colored and White Citizens—Important Papers relating to the Dawn Institute.

MR. EDITOR,—I am at present in time-worn Amherstburg, the place so eagerly sought for by hundreds of our underground friends, and by numerous upperground ones also, who are hopeful of a happy home on our free soil. This is not a very inviting looking place, at first sight, and especially from the river; but on closer examination, one is disposed to compare it to the "singed cat," which was better than she at first looked to be. There is considerable public spirit shown, of late, by citizens, colored and white, and we may confidently look for a brisk and handsome town, at no distant date, judging from improvements.

The emigration to this point keeps steadily increasing and branching off into the several townships, carrying improvements and cultivation in the train. The relation between the people of different complexions, in this place, is very favourable, considering the efforts to completely estrange them, so assiduously made by the many "benefactors" that have settled in here to "do" for them. The testimony of reliable persons here is, that years ago, before Rice, and his co-adjutors, came hereabouts, the children were in the same schools, and the fathers worshipped at the same altars; but the Methodists [illegible] separated schools, churches, and donations for fugitives, and hence the separations—prejudice, distrust, &c.

Friend Peter Jackson, of this place, of whose hospitality I am now partaking, has just shown me the Proceedings of the first Convention held at London, June 2nd, 1841, for the purpose of considering the propriety of establishing the Dawn School; and containing also, an important letter from James Cannings Fuller, setting forth the purpose for which the funds in his possession were to be appropriated. The entire document is important, and is a standing contradiction to the assertions by the parties in possession, that the Dawn property does not belong to the colored people. Your readers shall have extracts from the Minutes, and the letter entire, at an early date.

By the way, as a brief history of the Dawn Institute has been proposed by some of your influential readers, these papers will fill up a very important blank, that their omission would otherwise occasion.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 1855.

Interesting Discussion on Emigration to Canada, between Miss M. A. Shadd, of Canada, on the Affirmative, and Mr. J. C. Wears, of Philadelphia, on the Negative.

On Monday and Tuesday evenings, 5th and 6th instant, in this City, the following question was discussed in a very spirited manner, before large and intelligent audiences, by the parties above named: "Shall the Free Colored People of the United States, Emigrate to Canada?"

For a number of years, Mr. Wears had been regarded by many, as one of "our leaders," as well as one of our most able debators, and withal an unflinching opponent of emigration to Canada, or elsewhere; on the other hand, the ability of Miss Shadd, as a speaker and writer, and especially as an advocate of Canadian Emigration, the public were also familiar with. Hence no small amount of interest were manifested to hear the question fairly discussed. On the first evening, therefore, at the suggestion of Mr. W., three competent and respectable gentlemen were appointed as Judges on the occasion.

Miss S. being on the affirmative, of course opened the discussion. In rising, with her notes in her hand, she commenced her remarks by complimenting the high character, as a debator, of her opponent, obviously leaving room for the audience to infer that she was fully sensible of the responsibility she occupied; however, she proceeded to state, that she had "Twelve Reasons to offer on the present occasion, in favor of Emigration to Canada;" adding, at the same time, that if another opportunity should occur, she would obligate to produce "twelve additional reasons."

Accordingly, she read her reasons, consecutively, emphasizing each one strongly; after which, she occupied her half hour in their support—saying many good things in favor of Canada—the impartiality of the laws of the country—the fine agricultural advantages—cheapness of the soil—health of the climate—character of the inhabitants, and condition of the colored man, especially; frequently contrasting his chances, as a British subject, with his condition and chances in the United States, under oppression, proscription, &c.

Miss S.'s, half hour having expired, Mr. W. took the floor, doubtless entertaining the opinion, as did not a few of his friends, that he would very triumphantly demolish all her en masse emigration notions—would place emigration to Canada in the same category with African colonization, and thereby bring both schemes equally into bad odor. Consequently, after paying a polite tribute to Miss Shadd's ability and sincerity, he took occasion to give notice that he should treat her in the discussion precisely as he would a gentleman, occupying her position; assuring the audience that his opponent, though a lady, was too high spirited to crave any special favor or courtesy, as in fact she was not entitled to any; hence, he wished all to understand, that there were to be no compromises in the matter.

Having thus got fairly under way, without troubling himself however with replying to the "Twelve Reasons," he eloquently set forth what he conceived would be the disastrous consequences of en masse emigration, viz: the slave in his chains would be forsaken, the fugitive would be left unprotected, the ends of colonization would be satisfied, and, in short, the humiliating concession would then appear, as our enemies have said, that the colored man could not be elevated in this country. The speaker also mentioned, that prejudice existed to a great extent in Canada, to the colored man's disadvantage. As evidences of encouragements, he declared that great progress were to be witnessed amongst the colored people, and that by remaining, their elevation would ultimately be effected, &c., &c. Though this was Mr. W.'s first speech, obviously, it was his most effective one; all his "thunder" in it was exhausted.

Miss S., in entering upon her second half hour, in a felicitous mood, charged her opponent with having shunned the issue; in which she was reminded of the "Irishman's flea." "When he went to put his finger on it, it was not there."

The pertinency of the illustration seemed obvious, and much amused the audience. In further reviewing his remarks, she showed, that although en masse emigration were feasible, and the doctrine sound, nevertheless it could not reasonably be inferred that a spontaneous uprising would universally be resorted to by the people, prepared or unprepared.

As to the slave and the fugitive being left in his chain and forsaken, she argued that it would be quite the reverse; taking the position that the colored man's increase of character, wealth, influence, education, &c., in Canada, where his manhood would be recognized, would afford opportunities to aid to a far greater extent than could be done under present circumstances; while poor, and unprotected, being obliged to fill menial occupations, with but poor pay, taxed heavily to support schools, public institutions, State and General Government; while Common School privileges are withheld, the right of franchise denied! without being allowed the slightest liberty or say, in making the laws by which he is ruled; besides being hourly exposed to the infamous fugitive slave law, and countless other outrages. With regard to colonization, her position was, that emigration would be just the antidote for that vile scheme. Though the colonizationists wanted to get rid of the black man, they had no wish or idea of his going to Canada, where he would occupy precisely the same position enjoyed by the whites, socially, politically, and religiously. Under those circumstances, their doctrines and aims would all be brought to naught.

Also, by emigrating, she held up the idea, that in the event of the colored man's gaining power, being on the confines of the slave territory, he might, in a time of need, be on hand to settle accounts with his oppressors.

"Instead of having to wait five hundred years for his rights," as Dr. Smith, and others amongst the leaders have said, "he could enjoy them immediately." Instead of the young colored man having to put up with being a barber, and other pursuits, by which he is unable to make a respectable livelihood, he could be a respectable and successful farmer, mechanic, or professional man in Canada. Many instances of very rapid progress in the various callings in life, by those who went pennyless, were enumerated by the speaker. Likewise, on the score of prejudice, she replied to Mr. W., acknowledging that it did exist, and in some places had been very malignant; but having no time to back it up, the colored man had nothing to fear; there, it was manageable, not like it is in the States. Even the waiters in St. Catherines, only two years ago, had put an effectual stop to the omnibus proscription; so now, where Bishop Payne, two years ago was refused a ride, by the same omnibuses, colored men are daily being accommodated, without distinction. In other places also, she referred to the existence of prejudice a few years back, but by colored people settling in the neighborhood, and making improvements, it had been easily dispelled. In the large towns and districts, amongst the most respectable inhabitants, schools, churches, colleges, offices, &c., &c., &c., were all acceptable to the colored man, if he would only avail himself of the privileges. Quite a number of instances were cited, showing that capable men were already filling responsible and lucrative positions in office, having been duly elected thereto.

In conclusion, she scouted the idea entertained by many, that because here is our birth-place, here we must abide, fare well or fare ill; for spite, if for no other reason.

Mr. W.'s second half hour, evidently by this time he realized; that in attempting to answer Miss S.'s reasons, and at the same time, attend to some little incidental points, he would have quite an uphill job of it; a performance which he had not contracted for. In Pennsylvania, the slave hunting ground, especially in Philadelphia, the residence of the notorious kidnapper, Alberti; the dead Engraham, the infamous Judge Kane, &c.; &c., even the astute and gifted Mr. W. could not readily find plausible arguments in favor of a country tolerating such monsters, and the diabolical laws they administer.

Mr. W. however, remained on the "old platform," throughout, warmly contending that it was not the business of the colored man to emigrate under any circumstances, in view of his present condition.

The hour of adjournment having again arrived, and all parties being willing for the discussion to close, it only remained for the judges to give their decision in the matter; which, in a very able, fair, and impartial manner, they proceeded to do—all agreeing that Miss Shadd had fully sustained her positions.

While the judge was delivering the opinion, part of which had been written, Mr. W., seeing that there was no chance for himself, and wishing to defeat the "ends of justice," he very abruptly called him to account; also a friend or two of Mr. W. suggested that the house should decide; but neither the house nor the judges heeded the suggestion of Mr. W. or his friends; consequently they were obliged to bear their defeat as well as they could under the circumstances.

Yours, &c.,
C. W.

An Impostor Again Exposed.

We have received a letter from a gentleman in Troy, N. Y., which makes it necessary for us to expose a colored man, named O. C. GILBERT, as a base impostor, and one who, by his plausible address, is well calculated to deceive a generous public. The letter before us states, "the nature of his stay in this city, and his general conduct, are such as make it necessary for me to know if, indeed, his statements are true. He pretends, when absent from this place, to be making collections for a fugitive, and when here, he is living on his money, and learning music. I wish to know your opinion concerning him, as he professes to be a friend and intimate acquaintance of yours."

This Gilbert has been reasoned with, and condemned, and exposed, and we really thought he had made up his mind to pursue an honest calling, to work for a living. We (the junior Editor) have been acquainted with him for six years, and never learned any thing derogatory to his character until quite recently, when he was promptly exposed as an impostor, through the columns of this paper. We now again caution the public against him. He is pursuing a course of conduct which will yet lead him to the State Prison, unless he stops immediately in his thieving career. That the public may be upon their guard against him, we will describe him. He is a large, robust man, about 5 feet nine or ten inches in height, dark brown, or black complexion, partially bald, and quite bowlegged. Let all the papers pass him around.—Fred. Douglass' Paper.

Ten Dollars a Pound!

This is the selling price of choice specimens of human flesh in Virginia. We quote the market report of the Washington Union:

"LARGE SALE OF NEGROES.—At Charlotte C. H., on Monday of last week, fifty negroes belonging to the estate of the late John M. Thomas were sold at public auction for the aggregate sum of $25,400. Some other negroes were sold at the same time, and one or two boys, weighing 95 pounds, brought about $950 each."

There are no recent quotations from the Cannibal Islands. But these Virginia prices must breed a famine among the human flesh-eaters, if the Washington Union circulates among them.—Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

A NEGRO AMBASSADOR.—Among the passengers just arrived in England by the royal mail steamer La Plata, is Jean Baptiste Damier, a negro baron of the empire of San Domingo, came over to represent the emperor Soulonque at the court of St. James during the absence of the present Haytien ambassador. Baron Damier is described as a very handsome black, with most gentlemanly manners. He speaks the French language, of course, most fluently, and the English language, he speaks very gramatically, and is remarkably shrewd and well informed. The baron came on board the royal mail steamer at Port-au-Prince in great state.

Fire in New York State Prison.

A very extensive fire occurred in the Work-house of the State Prison at Sing Sing, last night, which at 9 p. m., the hour of our latest information, had not been subdued. It appears that about six o'clock in the evening, the fire broke out in the hat-shop, from which it soon spread to the machine-shop, carpenter's-shop and other out buildings of the prison; considerable confusion prevailed among the prisoners, who had not yet returned to their cells. The shops destroyed were occupied by Chas. Watson, who employed sixty convicts in manufacturing hats; his loss is estimated at $40,000. The shops destroyed will cost the State $25,000 to replace them. It is surmised the fire is the work of an incendiary. Both male and female prisoners were almost frantic and many of them shouted out they wished for the destruction of the Prison. At the latest accounts all the work-shops attached to the State Prison, on the west side, were in flames.

Good Advice.

The following is from the Iowa Bugle, it says: "Dear reader, when you go shopping be sure you purchase of those who advertise. You cannot only buy much cheaper, but you will get good, fresh, fashionable goods. Those who advertise will sell at least three times as much as those who 'can't afford it,' and as a matter of course, he who advertises, can afford to sell for the profit of the other, and never has goods out of fashion, or half worn out handling them. By making your purchases of those whose wares are advertised you will get the worth of your money and change back."

LIQUOR LAW OF INDIANA.—A person named Herman, charged with violating the Liquor Law of 1855, was lately taken before Judge Perkins, of the Supreme Court of Indiana, on a habeas corpus. The Judge gave an elaborate opinion, the result of which was that, from what he had "taken notice of, historically, the use of liquors, as a beverage and article of trade and commerce, is so universal that they cannot be pronounced a nuisance." He therefore declared the Liquor Act of 1855 void, and discharged the prisoner.

THE ERIE RAILROAD.—The whole number of cars and locomotives on this road is 3168, which if coupled together in one train would reach a distance of 21 miles, and be able to carry 150,000 persons in one day from New York to Lake Erie. The company has in its employ not less than 5000 persons, whose pay per month is $125,000, or $1,500,000 per year.

A LIVE RACOON IN A BALE OF TOBACCO. Two customs officers were one day last week unpacking a bale of tobacco, in the bonded warehouse, Liverpool, when, they found a racoon, thin, indeed, to emaciation, but still alive. It had existed, probably for months, by nibbling at the raw ox hide, which thus at once became its food and prison-house. It has since been allowed a more generous fare, and is rapidly recovering from the effects of its long and hungry confinement.

On Saturday, 17th inst., Mr. Thomas J. Boyd, while riding on horseback in Lawrence County, Pa., was crushed to death by a dead tree falling on him. His horse was also killed.

Upwards of four hundred thousand quarts of huckleberries have been shipped from Michigan City, Indiana, during the past season, amounting to the handsome sum of forty thousand dollars.

MASSACHUSETTS.—The population of Massachusetts is not far from 1,250,000, which is an increase of 255,000 in five years, or 51,000 a year. The increase from 1840 to 1850 was only 26,000 a year. In 1860 at the present rate, it will have 1,600,000 inhabitants, and will be among the great States of the Union.

Mail Robbery at Paris.

On Tuesday night, about 12 o'clock, as Mr. Cowles, the Mail Carrier, was bringing the mails for the East, from the Post Office in the village of Paris to the Railway Station, the bag was taken out of the cart. The carrier did not miss the bag till he had arrived at the station. It is known that the mail bag contained upwards of $1,700.—Nothing has been seen of the bag since; nor has any clue been discovered to lead to the arrest of the robber or robbers.

At Port Hope, one small fore and aft and a large three-masted schooner are building. The Guide names fourteen schooners which have been built at Port Hope, and expresses the opinion that on the opening of the railway, by which supplies of the best oak can be easily procured, the business of ship building will be largely increased at that port.

NOTHING LIKE LEATHER.

IF YOU WOULD BE RICH,

Read this, and save your Penny.

GOOD morrow, friend—I'm a stranger in your borough, can you inform me where I can get a pair of good boots made?

"Yes, sir, I can just go to T. W. WILSON'S King St. East, Chatham, next to Smith's Grocery, where he can accommodate you to a nicety, I'll be bound."

"What, then is your judgment in regard to the quality of boots and shoes?"

"Most excellent—I'm an old boot and shoe maker; many are the days that I've drawn the cords."

"Where did you say I could find him?"

"Why, the next door to Mr. Andrew Smith's Grocery, corner of King and William Streets, East—any person can tell you."

"Will you conduct me there?"

"I will with pleasure; for I know him to be, from experience, one of the best manufacturers of BOOTS AND SHOES in town. His stock is of his own manufacture, and he has always on hand a superior quality for gentlemen's wear. He's also very particular in getting up his work, so I'm confident he can't fail to give reasonable satisfaction to those who favor him with their custom."

"There are [illegible] whose work is beautiful to look upon, but very pinching to the feet; and I for one abominate such, which in foul weather give me excruciating pain."

"Ah, yes, too much [illegible] by fitters from the boot moulders hands; but he's not one of them: he endeavours to make a systematic fit, ensuring from joint to heel, and from lump to [illegible] leaving the most minute protuberance or pressure upon the feet; and he seldom fails to make his boots set as easy thereon as a glove upon a lady's tender finger. Besides, he always keeps a superior stock on hand; perhaps you might obtain a pair upon the instant, that would fit your feet and please the eye."

"I [illegible] again,

"For [illegible] and will save at each [illegible] Call— on the [illegible] and [illegible] will wear you longer.

"I am [illegible] Are you a cash man?"

"I am; for he who pays cash skips the discount of credit, and secures it in his own pocket."

"Then that's the place, for his motto reads"—

Ask of me no trust, when you come to buy;
Ask of me no trust, for you I must deny;
Ask of me no trust, it hath destroyed many;
Ask of me no trust, I cannot grant you any;
Ask of me no trust, but with your cash rally;
Ask of me no trust, nor with my pocket dally.

FORGERY.

The Counterfeit Radway's Ready Relief in Canada.

THE LIVES OF THE PEOPLE IN DANGER.

THE public are cautioned against purchasing a counterfeit of Radway's Ready Relief, which is now circulating through the Canadas.—We are informed that parties at Hamilton, C.W. are in the habit of selling a spurious article of our Ready Relief, for the genuine to dealers. This is not only a fraud upon us, but is a most wicked imposition on the public. The wretch that will knowingly lend himself to so vile and treacherous a trick, for the gain of a few extra sixpences, is unsafe to deal with, and should be shunned by all respectable dealers, for if a few sixpences will induce him to rob the distressed sufferer of hope and health and to place the invalid's life in danger, he would not scruple to deceive his best customers.

Dealers who wish the genuine, purchase only of established credit, not of irresponsible pedlars or travelling adventurers and impostors.

Dealers who have R. R. R. offered to them below our regular price, may rely upon the same being a counterfeit preparation. We never sell R. R. R. in large quantities for less than 10 per cent. from our regular gross price. Dealers who purchase the counterfeit and offer the same for sale, render themselves liable to prosecution.

All of our travellers and authorized Agents have a power of Attorney signed by us, authorizing them in our name, to transact our business.

The following are our only Agents in Hamilton, C. W. T. BICKLE & SON; HAMILTON, KNEESHAW & CO., In Toronto, LYMAN. BROTHERS, & CO., are our general agents—we also sell to SIMPSON & CO.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1856.

THE
SATURDAY EVENING POST.

ESTABLISHED AUGUST 4TH, 1821.
Weekly Edition between 80,000 and 90,000!

IN issuing their Prospectus for 1856, the proprietors of the Post take it for granted, that the public are already tolerably well acquainted with the character of a paper that has grown strong during the storms and sunshine of THIRTY-FOUR YEARS. Their object always has been as it remains to be, to publish a weekly paper for the family circle, which shall not only amuse, but also instruct and improve, those who may read it. To accomplish this object, the best articles are selected or condensed from foreign and domestic periodicals, and original articles of an instructive character, procured when possible.

Letters from Foreign Lands; the most interesting portions of the Weekly News of the World; Sketches of Life, Adventure and Character; Selected and Original Articles upon Agriculture; Account of the Produce and Stock Markets; and a Bank Note List are included among the solid information to be constantly found in the Post.

But the mind requires a wider range—it has faculties which delight in the humorous and lively the imaginative and poetical. These faculties also must have their appropriate food, else they become enfeebled, and, as a consequence, the intellect becomes narrow and one-sided, and is not able to take an enlarged and generous view of human nature and its destiny. To satisfy these Heaven-implanted cravings of our mental being, we devote a fair proportion of the Post to FICTION, POETRY, and HUMOR.

Among our contributors in the first two of the above departments, are several of the most gifted writers in the land. We also draw freely for Fiction and Poetry upon the best periodicals in this country and Great Britain. We design commencing a New Story by MRS. SOUTHWORTH, author of "The Deserted Wife," "Miriam," &c. in our first paper for January next.

Engravings—Illustrative of important places and actions, of Agricultural and other new Inventions, with others of a Humorous, though refined character, are also freely given.

The Postage on the Post to any part of the United States, paid quarterly or yearly in advance, at the office where it is received, is only 26 cents a year.

Terms.—The Terms of the Post are Two Dollars, if paid in advance; Three Dollars, if not paid in advance. For Five Dollars, in advance, one copy is sent three years. We continue the following low terms for Clubs, to be sent, in the city, to one address, and, in the country, to one Post Office.

4 Copies,	- - - - per annum	$ 5
8 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$10
13 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$15
20 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$20

Persons residing in British North America must remit twenty-five cents in addition to the subscription price, as we have to prepay the United States postage.

ADDITIONS TO CLUBS.—Any person having sent the money and names for a Club, may add new names to it at the same rate, provided the latter will allow their subscriptions to end at the same time those of the main list do. We will willingly supply the back numbers, if we have them. Our object is to have all the subscriptions in each Club end at the same time, and thus prevent confusion.

The money for Clubs must always be sent in advance. When the sum is large, a draft should be procured if possible—the cost of which may be deducted from the amount.

Post-Masters or others sending for Clubs, would confer a favor by having them sent to one address, when they can do so conveniently.

The papers to Clubs are invariably stopped at the expiration of the period for which they have subscribed.

A NEW ARRANGEMENT.—Our subscribers will take notice that we now have no collecting agents out of this State. They will therefore please remit to us direct.

All persons addressing letters to us should be careful to give the name of the State, as well as of the town, in which they live. All letters must be post-paid

Subscribers wishing their paper changed, will please give the name of the Post-Office to be changed from, as well as the Post-Office they wish it hereafter sent to.

We trust that such of our old friends, the Post-Masters, as do not feel inclined to take advantage of our liberal offers themselves, will show our Prospectus to other influential and responsible persons who will be willing to raise Clubs, &c.

DEACON & PETERSON,
No. 66, South Third Street, Philadelphia.

A MORE "IMPORTANT NOTICE!"

American Tract Society—Slavery.

THE Independent, of New York, in an article in that paper, of the 15th March, being one of a continuation of articles regarding the "American Tract Society," has this sentence:—"For thirty years, one of the greatest institutions of Evangelical Christendom, has been testifying in effect, that the institution of Slavery, the buying and selling of human beings, and the profession of the slave-trader, are less offensive to God, less contary to the Gospel, less perilous to the souls of men, than the practice of dancing. It has attempted to exhibit and authenticate, on the widest scale, an administration of Christianity, in which there shall be no more syllable of rebuke for crimes that shock the morals sense of Christendom. The influence of the Tract Society has tended to make the Southern churches more timid and cowed in the presence of the imperious slave-trading interest. As a consequence of this policy—partly, but not exclusively—behold the SOUTHERN APOSTACY!"

In December 1844, a report of "The" Committee of the Synod of New York and New Jersey, on the subject of the mutilations of books by the American Tract Society," was published; and in that report, the mutilations and omissions in the editions published, by that Society, of D'Aubigne's History of the Great Reformation, were pointed out—besides, there are the omissions and expurgations in other books published, as to the vile sin of Slavery, and the substitution of sentences other than the original.

The notice by me entitled, "Publications," referable to these matters, has been widely circulated, and a Canadian public are again reminded of their duty.

JOHN J. E. LINTON.

Stratford, C. W., March 20, 1855. 8

Exhibitions and Lectures.

THE Undersigned proposes exhibiting the

Diorama of Uncle Tom's Cabin,

in the principal Cities, Towns, and Villages in the Northern States and Canada: and to accompany them with abundant evidence as to the truthfulness of the facts assumed by the author, in the work known by that name, which will include the recital of some most mysterious and thrilling incidents in the history of his own family. The flight of his parents for freedom—their capture, and return to slavery and their second flight; a history of their lost boys, who were stolen and sold into slavery—the death of one of them, and the redemption of the other by the purchase of himself; and the final purchase for the enormous sum of five thousand dollars.

The paintings, comprising the scenes of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," are the production of an eminent French artist, and show as large as life, and represent the most prominent scenes and characters in the work.

In order to render our labors more effectual and create more general interest and benefit, we propose the following arrangements, viz:—To give one half of the receipts to any Church or Society, or regularly appointed committee by the puplic, who will provide a place, secure an audience, and defray the expenses incident to the meeting.

An arrangement by which every Church or Society in the country may replenish their funds, aid their pastors, or whatever other benevolent object that commends itself to public patronage.

Let such then who would help the cause, help themselves, and help us in our feeble endeavours to enlist the public ear to the cries of bleeding humanity; go at once to work, communicate immediately with us preparatory to an exhibition.

We shall not however confine ourselves to that deplorable and humiliating aspect of the colored man's case, repesented in that work.

But we promise at no distant date, a new programme of very different scenes, representing not only an entirely original, but a far more hopeful aspect of the black man, than has ever been presented to the American public.

It is neither egotism, nor yet flattery, in us to say that this mode of giving instruction possesses the double merit of engaging those two most important faculties that man possesses—the mind and the sight at the same time, and making an ineffacable impression. It is not as being necessarily dependent and degraded, then that, we shall confine our exhibitions of his character.

There have been places where, and times when the black man of modern times has proven himself the patriot, the statesman, and the warrior. As such, then, let him be known to the world, that it may acknowledge it, and to our youth, that they may imitate their example and copy their virtues.

We suffer more perhaps, from false representation, than all other ills put together.

Those amongst us who have acted the part of patriot are represented to be vicious and ungovernable: and those whom the most direful and crushing prejudices have debarred from the opportunities for higher development are represented as submissive willing underlings. Generation after generation are stamped with the same false impressions, and learn to assume it on the one hand, and regard it as a fixed inevitable fact on the other.

We are arranging a new and a very extensive programme of Distinguished Colored Men and the incidents with which they have been connected and acquitted themselves honorably—such as ATTICUS, "the first martyr of the Revolution," the "Colored Regiments at the Battle of New Orleans," and the distinguished and most prominent "black leaders" who freed the first spot discovered by Columbus, that was first desecrated to slavery—Hispanola—now Hayti.

I have endeavored to make the arrangements sufficiently liberal to meet the patronage and engage the attention of all who have an interest in our common cause.

For further important particulars, you will write me, (post paid,)

A HISTORY OF ALL NATIONS,
FROM THE
EARLIEST PERIODS TO THE PRESENT TIME;
OR
UNIVERSAL HISTORY:

IN WHICH THE HISTORY OF EVERY NATION, ANCIENT AND MODERN, IS SEPARATELY GIVEN.

Illustrated by 70 Stylographic Maps and 700 Engravings

By S. G. GOODRICH,

AUTHOR OF 'PICTORIAL GEOGRAPHY OF THE WORLD,' 'PARLEY'S CABINET LIBRARY,' 'PARLEY'S WALES,' &c.

Complete in one imperial octavo volume, of more than twelve hundred pages of double column letter-press; and upwards of seven hundred elegant illustrations.

It is believed that a Universal History, suitable in form, extent, and arrangement, to the wants of the mass of American readers, has never been presented to the public. For this reason, and in compliance with numerous suggestions from those entitled to respect, the author has undertaken the formidable task of supplying one of a popular character and for general use.

A reader of history should always have in mind two things—viz., the place where, and the time when, an event happened. In the present work therefore, the geography of each country whose history is carefully given; and to aid the reader, seventy stylographic maps have been added. Careful attention, also, has been paid to Chronology, so that, at every page and every chapter, the reader may find the dates of the events which are described.

In order to avoid the confusion which inevitably arises from embracing the whole history of mankind in a general chronological view, the author has adopted an ethnographic arrangement, by which he presents each nation separately. The advantages of this plan for a popular treatise, are obvious. The mind of the reader is not overtasked by a boundless extent of view, nor bewildered by a perplexing multiplicity of objects. On the contrary, everything is clear and distinct. Events, instead of being forced out of their true place and connection, are presented in easy and natural succession, thus imparting to the work the attraction and interest of continuous narrative. Another advantage of the plan is, that it not merely admits, but invites descriptive details, illustrative anecdotes, personal adventures and sketches of character, all of which serve not only to give life and effect to the pages of the historian, but to impart the colors of truth and reality to the pictures he may present.

While the work thus presents a separate and distinct history, and also exhibits the present state of every nation, ancient and modern, including the recent revolutions in Europe, still, for the purpose of showing how nations have acted upon or influenced the destinies of one another, General Views are given, at suitable periods, presenting the great movement of mankind, as one family, in its onward march from the past to the present time.

It is proper to state, that while the author promises only a compilation, yet he has endeavored to choose from the highest and best authorities; and while the work is offered as a popular treatise, it still seeks to present the practical results of philosophic investigation; and finally, that

From the National Era.

AN APPEAL.

Men of the Northern States! no more
Let honeyed words be breathed by you;
The days of compromise are o'er,
And now be firm, be true,

No more let smooth hypocrisies,
Or braggart threats, or crafty smiles,
Betray our dearly-cherished cause
To Slavery's shameless wiles.

For it were better e'en to die
In battling for the rights of man,
Than live, our liberty a lie,
Our lips beneath the ban.

For those that bend the supple knee,
And sell their souls for gold or place,
A fiercer doom there yet may be
Than for that stricken race,

That groan beneath the driver's whip,
And breathe but another's will;
And they a bitterer draught may sip,
Than that which they distil.

But to those nobles who have stood,
And long and fearlessly have striven,
A people's deathless gratitude
(Their fit reward) shall yet be given.

For God will send a brighter day—
The East is red with promise now—
And, in its glad, triumphant ray,
With praise shall all men bow.

The time is near; be true, be strong,
And be united in the fight,
And Heaven will aid us, and ere long
Give victory to the Right.

Great and Glorious Victory of the U. S. Army!!!

In the latter end of the month of Sept., the United States Army, under command of General Harney, came up to a party of Sioux women at Sandy Hill, near the river Platte. The women had their children with them and the general determined to give them battle. The women fought with the most determined courage, but were obliged to yield at last, leaving ninety infants and mothers dead upon the field, and fifty females and children prisoners, who were brought into camp chained and handcuffed. The Washington papers have paraded the above recited gallant deeds of general Harney, as a set-off against the capture of Sebastopol. Regretting that such magnanimity and gallantry should go down to posterity unsung, the following lines have been penned in honor of the great event:

The Battle of the Squaws and Squatters.

Hail to the chief! Columbia's Harney brave!
Competitor with Hynau, the famed woman-whipper.
Hail to the land of freedom!—and the slave!
Holding both easy as a well-worn slipper.
Hail to the battle! theme of this my song,—
To the women and children ta'en in glorious fight.
Hail to those patriots who make right of wrong!
And flog their women when they're not quite white!
Hail to the greatest—cutest—finest nation—
The most remarkable in all creation!
Why should a sneer sit on a foreign face,
Whilst I recount these manly—glorious actions!
Is whipping women such a great disgrace
When Russia suffers such transactions?
Oh Muscovy! Columbia! combine—frown down
The nations that dare 'gainst slavery to clamor;
It's needful to save the great Czar's crown—
Protect ourselves against emancipation drama,
Despite their prejudice against our rising glories—
Harney! we'll sing your victory 'gainst squaws and babes.
Caring for neither French nor English stories;
We'll fight their women and leave alone their braves.
'Twas on the Sandy hill beside the river Platte,
The Sioux women with their infants fought us,
And as each mother fierce as tiger-cat,
With furious courage came athwart us—
"Fix bayonets—charge 'em," our brave Harney cries,
"Not one of you must throw away his fire.
"See that young child: he runs—he flies—
"Shoot him or he may live to bring his sire."*
Onward the women 'gainst our soldiers flew—
Then did our manly hearts beat high for glory,
As each in turn a babe or mother slew,
Striving with Harney for a name in story.
Prisoners they took to grace the victor's car
Full fifty women with their infants captured.
Brave Harney—the hero of this glorious war,
Receives a nation's gratitude, enraptured.
Contemning manhood's inconvenient laws,
Sooner 'gainst women than 'gainst man would fight;
With Yankees whatever is—is right.

MORAL.

If you don't know the Almighty Yankee nation,
Then learn, that tawney men or women you may flog—
But if you'd escape from utter condemnation,
Don't let them see you drink a glass of grog.
By drinking smashes—instead of smashing squaws,
Harney 'd ne'er got a nation's just applause.

* General Harney in desiring his troops to kill the child shows his policy as well as his courage, and proves his claim to the nations sympathy and admiration. Young as the urchin was, he had the vile intent of bringing up the braves to support the women in the action.

☞ A poet says:—"I dreamt that I was engaged in writing, and that in the midst of a sentence a musquito came buzzing in my ear. I remonstrated with him for disturbing me, having spoilt a beautiful paragraph. "I will not trouble you," he replied, "I have merely come to punctuate a passage."

Elephant Hunting.

From Eight Years' Residence in Ceylon.

By S. W. Baker.

Elephant Game.

The lake was about five miles round and was quite full of water, the surface of which was covered with a scanty, but tall, rushy grass. In the lake, browsing upon the grass, we counted twenty-three elephants, and there were many little ones, no doubt, that we could not distinguish in such rank vegetation. Five large elephants were not more than 120 paces distant; the remaining eighteen were in a long line, about a quarter of a mile from the shore, feeding in deep water. We were well concealed by the various trees which grew upon the dam, and we passed half-an-hour in watching the manœuvers of the great beasts as they bathed and sported in the cool water.—However this was not elephant shooting, and the question was, how to get at them? The natives had no idea of the sport, as they seemed to think it very odd that we did not fire at those within a hundred paces distant. I now regretted my absent gun-bearers, as I plainly saw that these village people would be worse than useless. We determined to take a stroll along the base of the dam to reconnoitre the ground, as at present it seemed impossible to make an attack, and even were the elephants within the forest there appeared to be no possibility of following them up through such deep water and heavy ground with any chance of success. However they were not in the forest, being safe, belly and shoulder deep in the tank. We strolled through mud and water thigh deep for a few hundred paces, when we suddenly came upon the spot, where, in ages past, the old dam had been carried away.—Here the natives had formed a mud embankment, strengthened by sticks and wallets. Poor fellows; we were not surprised at their wishing the elephants destroyed, the repair of their fragile dam was now a daily occupation, for the elephants, as though out of pure mischief, had chosen this spot as their thoroughfare to and from the lake, and the dam was trodden down in all directions. We found that the margin of the forest was everywhere flooded to a width of about 200 yards, after which, it was tolerably dry; we, therefore, returned to our former post.

An Elephantine Batteau.

It struck me that the only way to secure a shot at the herd would be to employ a ruse, which I had once practised successfully some few years ago. Accordingly, we sent the greater part of the villagers for about half-a-mile along the edge of the lake, with orders to shout and make a grand hullaballoo on arriving at their station. It seemed most probable that, upon being disturbed, the elephants would retreat to the forest by their usual thoroughfare; we accordingly stood on the alert, ready for a rush at any given point which the herd should attempt in their retreat. Some time passed in expectation, when a sudden yell broke from the far point, as though twenty demons had cramp in the stomach. Gallant fellows are the Cingalese at making a noise, and a grand effect this had upon the elephants; up went tails and trunks, the whole herd closed together, and made a simultaneous rush for their old thoroughfare. Away we skipped through the water straight in shore through the forest, until we reached the dry ground, when turning sharp to our right, we soon halted exactly opposite the point at which we knew the elephants would enter the forest. This was grand excitement; we had a great start of the herd, so that we had plenty of time to arrange gun-bearers, and take our positions for the rencontre. In the meantime, the roar of water caused by the rapid passage of so many large animals approached nearer and nearer. Palliser and I had taken splendid positions so as to command either side of the herd on their arrival, with our gun-bearers squatted around us behind our respective trees, while the non-sporting village followers, who now began to think the matter rather serious, and totally devoid of fun, scrambled up various large trees with ape-like activity.—A few minutes of glorious suspense and the grand crash and roar of broken water approached close at hand, and we distinguished the mighty phalanx, headed by the largest elephants, bearing down exactly upon us, and not a hundred yards distant. Here was luck! There was a grim and very murderous smile of satisfaction on either countenance as we quietly cocked the rifles and awaited the onset; it was our intention to let half the herd pass us before we opened upon them, as we should then be in the very centre of the mass, and be able to get good and rapid shooting. On came the herd in gallant style, throwing a spray from the muddy water, and keeping a direct line for our concealed position. They were within twenty yards and we were still undiscovered, when those rascally villagers, who had already taken to the trees, scrambled still higher in their fright at the close approach of the elephants, and by this movement they gave immediate alarm to the leaders of the herd. Round went the colossal heads; right about, was the word, and away dashed the whole herd back towards the tank.

In the same instant we made a rush in among them, and I floored one of the big leaders by a shot behind the ear, and immediately after, as bad luck would have it, Palliser and I both took the same bird, and down went another to the joint shots. Palliser then got another shot, and bagged one more, when the herd pushed straight out to the deep lake, with the exception of a few elephants, who turned to the right; after which Palliser hurried through the mud and water, while I put on all steam in chase of the main body of the herd. It is astonishing to what an amount a man can get up said steam in such a pitch of excitement. However, it was of no use in this case, as I was soon hip deep in water, and there was an end to all pursuit in that direction.

At them again.

It immediately struck me that the elephants would again retreat to some other part of the forest after having made a circuit in the tank; I accordingly waded back at my best speed to "terra firma," and then, striking off to my right, I ran along parallel to the water for about half-a-mile, fully expecting to meet the herd once more on their entrance to the jungle. It was not that I deplored the absence of my regular gun-bearers; the village people had no taste for this gigantic scale of amusement, and the men who carried my guns would not keep up; fortunately, Carrasi, the best gun-bearer, was there, and he had taken another loaded rifle, after handing me that which he had carried at the onset. I waited a few moments for the lagging men, and succeeded in getting them well together, just as I heard the rush of water, as the elephants were again entering the jungle, not far in advance of the spot upon which I stood. This time they were sharp on the "qui vive," and the bulls, being well to the front, were keeping a bright look-out. It was in vain that I endeavoured to conceal myself until the herd had got well into the forest; the gun-bearers behind me did not take the same precaution, and the leading elephants both saw and winded us, when at a hundred paces distant. This time, however, they were determined to push on for a piece of thicker jungle, which they knew lay to this direction and upon seeing me running towards them, they did not turn back to the lake, but slightly altered their course in an oblique direction, still continuing to push on through the forest, while I was approaching at right angles with the herd. Hallooing and screaming at them with all my might, to 'ease some of the old bulls into a charge, I ran at top speed through the fine open forest, and soon got among a whole crowd of half-grown elephants, at which I would not fire; there were a lot of fine beasts pushing along in the front, and towards these I ran as hard as I could go. Unfortunately, the herd seeing me so near, and gaining upon them, took to the ruse of a beaten fleet and scattered in all directions; but I kept a few big fellows in view, who were still pretty well together, and managed to overtake the nearest and knock him over.

The Old Bull Elephant.

Up went the tail and trunk of one of the leading bulls at the report of the shot, and trumpeting shrilly, he ran first to the one side then to the other, with his ears cocked, and sharply turning his head to either side I knew this fellow had his monkey up, and that a little teasing would bring him round for a charge. I therefore redoubled my shouts and yells, and kept on in full chase, as the elephants were straining every nerve to reach a piece of thick jungle, within a couple of hundred paces. I could not go any faster, and I saw that the herd which was thirty or forty yards ahead of me, would gain the jungle before I could overtake them as they were going at a slapping pace, and I was tolerably blown with a long run at full speed, part of which had been through deep mud and water. But I still teased the bull, who was now in such an excited state, that I felt convinced he would turn to charge. The leading elephants rushed into the thick jungle, closely followed by the others, and to my astonishment, my excited friend, who had lagged to the rear, followed their example. But it was only for a few seconds, for, on entering the thick bushes, he wheeled sharp round and came rushing out in full charge. This was very plucky, but very foolish, as his retreat was secured when in the thick jungle, and yet he courted further battle. This he soon had enough of, as I bagged him in his onset with my remaining barrel by the forehead shot. I now heard a tremendous roaring of elephants behind me, as though another section was coming in from the tank; this I hoped to meet; I therefore reloaded the empty rifles as quickly as possible, and ran towards the spot.

The Young Bull Elephant.

The roaring still continued, and was apparently almost stationary, and what was my disappointment on arrival, to find, in place of the expected herd, a young elephant of about four feet high, who had missed the main body in the retreat, and was now roaring for his departed friends. Those young things are excessively foolhardy and wilful, and he charged me the moment I arrived. As I had laid the rifle upon the ground, instead of firing at him, the rascally gun-bearers, with the exception of Carrasi, threw down the rifles and ran up the trees like so many monkeys, just as I had jumped on one side and caught the young elephant by the tail. He was far too strong for me to hold and, although I dug my heels into the ground and held on with all my might, he fairly ran away with me through the forest. Carrasi now came to my assistance, and likewise held on by his tail; but away we went like the tender to a steam-engine; wherever the elephant went, there we were dragged in company. Another man now came to the rescue, but the assistance was not of the slightest use, as the animal was so powerful and of such weight that he could have run away with half-a-dozen of us, unless his legs were tied. Unfortunately, we had no rope, or I could have secured him immediately, and seeing that we had no power over him whatever, I was obliged to run back for one of the guns to shoot him. On my return, it was laughable to see the pace at which he was running away with the two men who were holding on to his tail like grim death, the elephant not having ceased roaring during the run. I accordingly settled him, and returned to have a little conversation with the rascals who were still perched in the trees. I was extremely annoyed, and these people, if they had possessed a grain of sense, might have tied their long comboys (cotton cloths about eight feet long) together, and we might have thus secured the elephant without difficulty, by tying his hind legs. It was a great loss, as he was so large that he might have been domesticated and driven to Newera Ellia without the slightest trouble. All this was occasioned by the cowardice of these villanous Cingalese, and upon my lecturing one fellow on his conduct, he began to laugh This was too much for any person's patience, and I began to look for a stick which the fellow perceiving, he immediately started on through the forest like a deer. He could run faster than I could, being naked, and having the advantage of bare feet; but I knew I could run him down in the course of time, especially as, being in a fright, he would soon get blown. We had a most animated hunt through water, mud, roots of trees, open forest, and all kinds of ground; but I ran into him at last in heavy ground, and I dare say he recollects the day of the month.

The Three Williams.

Some forty years ago, in one of the anti-quated cities of the "Old Dominion," distinguished as the residence notwithstanding, of the British nobility, in the days of yore—might be seen frequently, on the "Court or Palace green," three mulatto boys, about the same age, amid the mixed multitude of other boys, at their accustomed play—at "Bandy." There was something rather prepossessing in the appearance of these boys, which always attracted the attentions of persons, and especially that of strangers. Their physiognomy indicated refinement, as to textile nature,—with intellect great, and a dignified humanity, so common to the Anglo-African persons. In tracing the history of these three Williams for a short time, we remark, that the need of ability and time for such a task, must, of necessity, make the effort but of little worth and interest to some person; but as there are others, who may receive some profit from it, we will make the record.

Fame has not given to these persons a right to public attention. Their history cannot be embellished with deeds such as kings perform, nor of exploits which heroes do,—nor of statesmen's labor,—Ah! no, nor even the efforts of a freeman's life! But inhuman wrongs—wrongs done to slaves, entitle them to the public sympathy! Their biography is marked with bondmen's deeds—exploits of slaves—seeking liberty, with labor of MEN TOO, among their PEERS! One of the Williams was the reputed son of a very distinguished lawyer, and all three might have been, for all we know to the contrary. They bore the mark of family resemblance, and would well pass for half brothers from the Saxon side. The mothers of these boys, were personal friends and women of rare beauty, and many virtues. True they were, claimed, as the property of three women of Saxon blood—two of whom were "Old Maids,"—and the third one, a young widow,—all professing christians too, though each of them, a slave owner. As the American slaveholder's code is similar to that of the "Old Latins," the children followed the mother's, as to condition, as a matter of course. Thus circumstanced, the boys lived easily until manhood. Indeed they were loved, and rared, by their so-called owners, more as children than slaves! They were the family pets. Each of them received some education. With one of them, no little pains was taken to make him quite accomplished as a gentleman. He was even sent to school, (privately, of course,) and he made no little proficiency. Another of them was put to a trade, and became ultimately a master mechanic. But the other one of them, the old maid indulged, and spoiled, and so he grew up less intellectual, though of more notoriety than the other two. Thus, in the prime of life, and the perfection of manhood—these young men were the idols of their society, and the pride of their parents. Ah! indeed, even more, for they were thus regarded, by many in the highest walks of life—yes the boasters of superiority, admired and loved them—looking upon them, as the first cut of humanity! Arriving at the stage of life when the lads and lasses will but woo, they had the heights of their well fortified affections carried by the irresistible assault of Cupid's force. Two of them married women from the ebony class—one a bond, and the other a free woman, and the third of them was an ardent lover, AND ONE PURELY LOVED, and by a woman too, of Anglo-Saxon blood—a slaveholders, young and beautiful, and from the highest walk in life. But we must pass over now her sad fate;—adding, however, that she was a true heroine, and her lover as noble a fellow as ever lived. She knew he loved her, though he was afraid to say so:—hence, she encouraged his hope drove away his fear, by forwarding him the following beautiful lines of Thomas Moore:—

"Love is a painful thrall
And not to be loved more painful still;
In short, it is the worst of pain,
To love and not to be loved again."

We must leave unrecorded much, and pass to say: Fortune often changes in the bondman's land. Revolution took place in their owner's circle, and the effect was hard upon the noble Williams. They braved the storm manfully for years, but finally had to yield to its unrelenting and destructive power. William, the lover, maddened because of his position in life, which would not allow him to pursue the course of a MAN towards the woman whom he loved, and to secure her, as he might have done honorably, as his partner for life, went well nigh to wreck, amid the storm of natural spirits, which at that time swept the sea of life in that accursed country. He endured years of anguish, such as results from hope deferred—an anguish such as cannot be expressed. Events finally made him hopeless, and in despair, and with a purpose as reckless as the winds, he bid adieu to friends, having obtained some needed paper from the old maid, and left that country as a gentleman black-leg, for parts unknown. The William of the ebony and free wife, in the meantime, became a christian, and father, and bore the trying changes of his Southern life, with a becoming resignation and fortitude. Providence smiled upon him, and he succeeded in business, and became well to do in the world. But as "The poor beetle, that we tread upon,

In corporeal suffering finds a pang as great,
As when a giant dies:"

So he felt the pang of the tyrant's heel, and rose up for for his liberty and his right. He bid defiance to the oppressor, who wronged him, kissed his dear little babe, embraced his wife, for the last time, and waved a farewell to his very many friends, and left, for a country heard of as "the land of the free, and the home of the brave." William, the husband of the woman of bondage, though high spirited and affectionate, was less magnanimous than the other two. He loved his wife most devotedly. His children was as dear to him as his life, notwithstanding they were regarded as the chattles of a so-called preacher of the gospel of Christ. Being a master mechanic, he was absorbed in his calling; hence not affected by the oppressor's usage, as his name sakes were, he had made himself content, having resigned himself to the bondman's fate. Thank heaven! fate had fixed it other than as he had purposed! His mistress died, and he was seized, and hurried from his affectionate, though heart-broken wife, and his dear little children, towards the far South, to be the slave of a professed christian judge. We will not attempt a description of the manifest anguish produced, by William's separation from his dear wife, and beloved children. But heaven favored him! and as he journied Southward, an opportunity was made for him to slip for freedom, and so he did. From New York, he put off for England—where a man cannot wear bonds unless for crime. Suffice it to say: the three Williams have met, "where the slave is free from his master, and where we hear not the voice of the oppressor." They are all now married, in a strange land, and have a fine prospect to do well in the world; but we dare not say that their life is perfectly happy, or that they are entirely exempt from the bitterness of the past; for—

Might was used against their right,
And did their hopes forever blight.

Reader! We know whereof we affirm. Obscurity must now cover the personages of our narrative. The influence of time however, may induce the writer, to cause his pen to mark more minutely their history.

A Nut for the Negrophilists.

A gentleman of this city relates to us some interesting facts relative to the abduction and return of one of his slaves, which are strikingly illustrative of the beauties of Northern Abolitionism.

The servant alluded to, a girl, was born and had been raised in his family, here, until she had attained the age of twenty-six years. About two years ago, she was induced by some of the Abolition emissaries, who are occasionally found prowling through this section of the Union, to leave with him for the North, by promises of freedom and protection. Since her departure, it seems, she has been quite a traveller among "the free States"—Indianna, Ohio, Pennsylvania and New York; and has spent some four months in Canada; all this time vainly seeking for some more comfortable home than that which, in an evil hour, she has been over-persuaded to quit.

Becoming at length disgusted with free States, free negroes, and the self-styled friends of the Southern slave, with their hollow pretensions and hypocritical sympathy, she determined to return to her master, cost her what sacrifice soever it might. In this she was resisted by certain parties in Canada, who, being apprehensive that, if she escaped from their "tender mercies," which are cruel, she would divulge the whereabouts of several other run-aways who were harbouring in that hospitable neighbourhood, did all they could to prevent her return. They even threatened her with death should she seriously attempt it.

We may remark here, for the satisfaction of her apprehensive friends in Canada, that since her return she has realized their fears as to the relations they so greatly deprecated.

Clever enough to get from New Orleans to the British Provinces, she came to the conclusion that she was smart enough to get back again, the way she came, or by some other. On the pretext of going to church, one fine Sunday morning, she started off; and, when once out of the sight of her benevolent guardians, she took "heart of grace," crossed the river which separates us from our kind neighbours, and soon found an opportunity of making her way along, via Cleveland and Cincinnati, "paying her way" by the labour of her hands, as well she might, until she reached her old home once more, in this city, where she is now content to remain; quite satisfied with the punishment she has received for her fault, in the experience she has had during her absence; enough, she says, to last her the rest of her lifetime.—N. O. Picayune, Nov. 11.

The above nut is not very hard to crack. She must be a poor excuse for a woman, who was unable, for two years and four months, to get a home, either in Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York and Canada, as comfortable, as she had in the den of thieves. We have lived in the States of Indiana and Ohio, and we now live in Canada, and from what we know of these countries and their inhabitants, we are prepared to say that either the informer of the Editor of the Picayune, or the woman, has uttered a palpable falsehood. The humblest home, in either of the countries, in which she is said to have sought one, is more comfortable than a Palace of Pirates,—such as the slaveholders of New Orleans are. We pledge a comfortable home to every slave, whom the slaveholders will send North of "Mason and Dixon's Line"—and to every slave who will slay the man-thief, and come to our country. The person referred to above, we think, must have been a Southern girl,—though 28 years of age, in both morals and manners, as well as understanding, and that accounts for her not obtaining a home such as she regarded as "comfortable" as that she had "quit." It is a matter of honor to the countries that she visited, that a Southern "girl," or New Orleans prostitute, could not find a "comfortable home"—that is, a den of demons, in them.

But our crackers will easily crack the "nut" given to "the Negrophilists." They are slaughter and death to the villians who sustain an institution that degrades humanity, as in the case of the "girl" of the "Picayune." She "at length disgusted with free states, free negroes, and the self-styled friends of the Southern slave, &c., returned to her master." The demons that destroy rationality—make a man a beast, that induces a person to hate freedom &c, and love slavery, and its legitimate result—"the sum of all villians," have forfeit all right to life, and should be slain with as little regret or remorse, as so many lice. Let these Harpies be shot, and we have no more hate of freedom and love of slavery—no more returning to masters—indeed the "nut" will be cracked! If the "tender mercies,—which are cruel"—of Canadians—if it be true, of a free, and Puritanical, moral, industrious, honest, and christian people, such as CANADIANS ARE,—pray tell us, Mr. Picayune, what are the "tender mercies" of YOU, SOUTHERN SLAVES, TO EVERY BASE PASSION AND VICE,—you an ignorant, immoral, lazy, dishonest set of barbarians? Are the "mercies" of you Pirates "tender" or "cruel," who starve and whip and rob men,—disgrace a woman, and tear from her bosom your own illegitimate offspring, and sell her to one man, and it to another?

It is said the "runaways" were "apprehensive" that "she would divulge the whereabouts of several, who were harbouring in that hospitable neighbourhood." Well, we are here, Mr. Picayune, and our "name is legion." We are not "apprehensive," for we have nothing to fear; either from you or the American Eagle. We assure you, my dear sir, that we are not "harbouring" here, for there is no need of such a thing in Canada. The British Lion protects us, while we walk abroad as free men! And further, we are prepared now to make [illegible] dian against the American man thieves! If you doubt it, do pay us a visit, with the intention to plunder, and if we have not a "Pleasant" [illegible] you by [illegible] some lofty oaks, whose [illegible] up, or taste the sauce [illegible] Mr. Picayune—be [illegible] Canada is a fine hemp country, as well as one of freedom, and [illegible] ox hide, nor hemp will convince the American man-thieves, that we intend to maintain, at all hazards, our freedom, then our loyal lead shall split their skins, as it did the rebels of 1837!

Prayer Promptly Answered.

The Petersburgh Democrat, tells a story of a [illegible] who have recently lost his [illegible] from attachment to [illegible] fulness of his faith, [illegible] wherewithal, at that footstool to which he had doubtless been taught to look for other and higher things. In the simplicity of his heart, he sat down and [illegible] a letter to his Redeemer, thinking [illegible], that so formal a mode of preferring his request, would meet with great attention. What was the surprise of the postmaster, Wm. N. Friend, Esq., on discovering among the contents of the letter box, one morning, lately a missive directed to "Jesus Christ." Opening it, he read the story of the boy's wants, and with a noble kindness, which we are not selfish enough to deprive our readers of the pleasure or profit of hearing, he deposited in the envelope the amount required, and directed it to the young applicant.

The manuscript missive directed to Jesus Christ, by the above orphan, is worth one thousand times its weight in diamonds. Let it be published for the child's benefit. We will give more for a copy of it than we would for "Uncle Tom's Cabin." It is worth more to true interest of sinful humanity, than the United States Constitution is.

Report of the True Band of Amherstburgh.

To the Editor of the Provincial Freeman:

SIR,—Will you publish in your paper, the Report of the Secretary and Treasurer of the True Band Society, of Amherstburgh, for the year ending Nov. 18th, 1855, and thereby greatly oblige a large number of friends to humanity, and to the success of the "Provincial Freeman?"

In order to get a clear understanding of the True Band Society of this place, we will state for the benefit of the public, that the operations of Isaac J. Rice, and his "family compact," consisting of himself, Messrs. Carter, Binga, and two or three others, was so completely destroying the character and prospects of the colored people of this entire district, and reflecting so strongly upon the industry of the fugitives of this Province, that the people of this place were constrained to arise in their might and form the True Band, on the principle of receiving no outward aid, or aid from a distance. The funds herein mentioned, have been paid in by the people here, and the payments out, have been made to all, suffering persons, who have come under its notice, whether members or not. And while the town government has had application from destitute white persons for relief, and has expended sums for the purpose, it has not been called upon for aid by colored persons; but the Society has been found adequate to the wants of all, of the destitute.

REMARKS.

With no little pleasure, we publish the report of the True Band Society of Amherstburgh, C. W. From it our friends, and enemies too, may learn a very important lesson. It shows very clearly the worse than useless efforts made by J. J. Rice & Company, for years, on behalf, pretendingly, of the poor and perishing colored people of that section of this Province. It indicates, too, the propriety of many of us, doing our best to put down the begging of old clothes, &c., for our people generally in Canada. Let us be understood, we are not opposed to giving of aid to churches, schools, and really indigent persons—indeed, we hold that the colored people ought to be treated in such things like all other people in like circumstances. There is no need of finding and clothing white people generally, among us, who are not rich—they work for their support, and so we urge, the colored people ought to do, or be left to starve.

Let the friends who are able and disposed to aid our people in this country, aid their intellectual and moral nature, and let them look out for their physical necessities. They will not starve! Friends, you degrade the colored people of Canada, by countenancing the food and clothing agents, who have gone out on their behalf. We want Preachers of the Gospel among us, to aid our own preachers in their arduous work of bringing sinners to acknowledge the truth, as it is in Jesus. We want intellectual teachers, and lecturers of morality, in our midst, to aid the efforts of such as we have. We want good and comfortable meeting houses almost in every direction, among each denomination—places of attraction for all casses, where the high praises of Jesus may be sung, &c. We say friends, we want food for our souls and clothing for our minds, and suitable houses for the work of God's praise. Let the True Band Society look out for the poor among, as doubtless it will; and may the Society every where imitate the example of the Society at Amherstburgh.

[illegible] Carter in Detroit—Threats— [illegible] Means resorted to get the [illegible] —Anti-Slavery Policy [illegible]

MR. EDITOR,—I send you the accompanying advertisement, cut from the Michigan Democrat and Inquirer, of Tuesday; for, although it has the appearance of Editorial, in some respects, I have been informed by Mr. Johnson, of the Democrat, that it was paid for as an advertisement. Carter, the getter up of the same, called to know if I would send it to you; so here it is:—

To the Public—Slander Refuted.

The following notice appeared it this paper a few days ago, copied from the Provincial Freeman. It contains a malicious libel upon the character of as honest and worthy a colored man as ever escaped from the fangs of slavery, to the bright land of liberty:

LOOK OUT FOR THE IMPOSTOR.—A colored man by the name of William Carter, of Chatham, C W., is now in the United States, begging money to buy himself. We have heard of him at Port Huron, Mich. We are informed that he is a base impostor!—Provincial Freeman.

Mr. William Carter is not a base impostor, but a true man, worthy of confidence and respect.

The following certificate of some of those who know him well, will tell of his real character:

Detroit, Sept. 20th, 1855.

To all to whom these presents may come:

We, the undersigned, do hereby certify that we are acquainted with William Carter—the bearer hereof who is a slave, owned by Cyrus Kenny of Lexington, Kentucky—that the character of said William Carter, is good, and that he is deserving of the assistance of his fellow citizens. Mr. Carter is endeavoring to obtain, the sum of $500,00 to purchase his liberty, which he now has the opportunity to do.

Very respectfully,

R. Jackson, Lexington, Rev. W. C. Munroe,
James Haley, M. J. Lightfoot,
Edward Harterel, Ky., Nathl. Colver.

In conclusion, I would state that the Provincial Freeman is opposed to every good and philanthropic object, which may not have been started by itself.

WM. CARTER.

It is a most discreditable publication; for although the parties who sign it may have known this Carter, in Kentucky, they do not say that that acquaintance was fifteen years ago, almost, and that after living in Detroit for years, he has lived in Canada for several years,—speaks of himself as a freeholder in Chatham, and can certainly claim the rights of a free British subject. Carter is in nowise modest; he has here written a beautiful character of himself. The question now is, how far individuals can go to the public on such bad errands, without the fear of exposure or interference? and, further, whether American slavery is pa amount to British liberty?—for while the British Government recognizes the freedom of Carter, after years of residence under it, he and his friends recommend him to the benevolent, as requiring five hundred dollars to buy himself. Two visits from him have convinced me, that this Carter is a dangerous man to be at large; for not only has he admitted, that he has begged four hundred dollars in Detroit—that he contemplates going to England, to do, as he says, "Josiah Henson did, although people tried to stop him;" but he is determined to use his pistols, if the Editor of the Free man, or any other man dispute his right to get money "in any way he pleases."

So, Mr. Editor, as he has been to Chatham, lately, and went in the night to see and "pay" you about that exposure; and has said, unreservedly, that he will prosecute, in Canada, for speaking of him, and will kill you should you visit Detroit—stay out of his way, by all means. A word as to how he operates, and that will serve to show how those of his class get along:—On his list of contributors, he speaks of General Cass, the Mayor of Detroit, some abolitionist and parties in Michigan, who had timely warning of his doings; and he further boldly avows his determination to make a business of this deception! After introducing himself in a "bold manner," having previously ascertained if the party be Democrat or what; he then accuses him, of robbing him of his liberty—speaks flatteringly of his high qualifications and political influence; in the same breath, calls to mind Clay, Webster, Calhoun, and other great men, and what he knows of their policy; should it be General Cass, or some other great man, converses upon them, and of his acquaintance with them; and the conversation ends by getting their name, and from five to twenty five dollars. This he did to Cass, who, in turn, referred him to a Mayor: who, in his turn, referred him to an Abolitionist, saying that he would see if those pretended friends would give as much. The Abolitionist declared it was against his principles to buy slaves; but not to be out-done by a slaveocrat, gave a ten, and sent him to another Democrat—to a party who saw the warning of his operations; he frankly admitted that he was Carter; but after flattering mention of the qualifications of the man, a county Attorney, said, your notice of him was dictated by personal dislike, because he had frustrated your schemes. The Attorney was convinced!—out came a five—out came a five from the Attorney's friend, &c. The Democrat was sorry too, that it had copied; as Carter had told them it was a malicious slander, suggested by personal dislike. And so this man who attacked the publishing Agent of your paper, as he said, to spill blood—who unblushingly boasts of his success, and the deception he uses to obtain it—who openly declares that he carries concealed weapons and who says he will seek the Freeman Editor's life, as the laws of Michigan do not hang for murder, should he come to Detroit—or wherever and whenever he can get him—buys over to his causes and sympathy the Democrat and Inquirer, without any other effort than his says so. There is one lamentable fact in the history of begging, that no matter how glaring the cheat that colored and other beggars practice, the deceivers have always, by means of their money or address, been able to buy or influence for a time the very presses that should be foremost to warn the people against the danger and to warn them against the claims of slaveholders.

This Carter, who confidently expects to be off to England, to get money before spring, as he says and who not only begs to buy himself, but his wife, a free born woman, from Indiana, will, through this medium, the Democrat, be enabled to get hundreds of dollars of the funds belonging to its readers, no doubt to add to the four hundred and eighty said to be in bank, and obtained from the people; and thus is perpetuated disgrace to the colored people, loss to the public, and new force is given to the impertinent bearing and dangerous personal designs of beggars.

M. A. SHADD.

For the Provincial Freeman.

AMHERSTBURG, Dec. 3rd, 1855.

We, the British Zion Wesleyan Church, beg leave to state to the public, through your paper, our progress within the last year. We have laboured for the last five years under many grievous disadvantages, but since we have been acknowledged by the British Government, our number has increased greatly. The calls of the people are many; labourers are constantly entering the vineyard, and there is plenty of work for them to do; for the harvest truly is great. As to our principles, we know no man by his color, nor what he has been; but if he is willing to comply with our Discipline, and do that which is right in the sight of God, he is accepted with us. We are registered in this Government, because, we felt and wished to be known as Loyal subjects of the British Government, sworn and acknowledged by it, and not identified with the United States Churches. We do not, nor will we belong to any Church where the whole power of the ecclesiastical government is in the white man's hands entirely; they may sit with us, as we should with them, as brothers on a religious and ecclesiastical level, and not otherwise. We will help to do our own business. British law acknowledges our manhood, and we must be true to the same. We were kept in the back ground by American slavery, and we do not love the tyrant's law so much as to be willing to abide by it and accept it here.

We are trying to buy ground to build a Church, and we hope the friends will assist us in this matter. We have Agents out collecting money for this purpose, viz:—Wm. L. Washington, California; Jared Chavers, United States; John W. Jones, Province of Canada.

Yours, respectfully,

JOHN LEWIS,
SAMUEL HUGHES,
JESSE BELL, Trustees.
ALEX. MARSHAL,
WM. THORNTON,

The Law of Libel.

The following is the ruling of a Philadelphia judge, upon the law of libel, and will be read with interest by newspaper proprietors and editors:—"On a motion of a new trial in the case of White against Potter, (a suit for libel in which a verdict for defendant was returned) Judge Storer remarked that every man's reputation for solvency was a matter of public discussion, connected with the commercial business of the country, and if a publication, such as that charged in the defendant's newspaper, was made from good motives, and without malice, and that the party made all the reparation in his power afterwards, the jury might well refuse to give damages, or merely nominal damages. Newspapers in these days have become the chroniclers of all public events, and whatever is proper for business-men to know, the editor, being guarded in his manner of stating facts, and publishing nothing but what he supposed at the time he had good authority to state, would have the right to publish in his newspaper. But if he published anything of this kind wantonly unnecessarily, and with an intention to injure, he would, of course, be liable."

Patent Democracy.

According to a fair estimate, there are not more than fifty slaveholders in Kansas, and all the power of the administration party has been exerted to promote the interests of fifty men—not one of whom is as good or as worthy as the poor slave he whips! This is modern Democracy! This is caring for the interests of the people! This is 'popular sovereignty!' In order to advance the interests of fifty mean and hardhearted wretches, a solemn national compact was violated, law was trampled upon, the feelings of the people were outraged, our country was disgraced, an honest man was removed from office for doing his duty, and an irresponsible slave—a fool and a coward—was appointed to a station requiring both sagacity and courage, an assemblage of cut-throats permitted to pass laws for civilized people, and troops have been sent into Kansas to enforce their laws! And still the Democratic party claims to be the ally of freedom, and a hireling press cants about 'popular sovereignty' in Kansas! And still men who assisted to bring these evils upon us, ask freemen to vote for them!—Cleveland Leader.

White and Black Slavery.

We wish we could get every white working man in Kentucky, to feel how closely their interests, and those of the black working men are united. To feel that the mill stone they are permitting to be bound around the neck of the negro bondmen, is also twisted around their own, and that they are both being dragged downward to a condition of brutish ignorance, degradation and slavish dependence.

That they could feel, that every vote they give for continuing in power the slaveholding cliques that control our state, or for the extension of slave territory, tends to degrade themselves, and their posterity, as effectually as the poor African upon whom it seems only to act.

We read from all parts of our State, continual complaints of the oppressive influence of certain cliques.

These cliques are charged with opposing the establishment of the ballot, that would enable the poor men of Kentucky, to cast their vote free of the insolent overseership of the purse proud aristocracy of our State, who care nothing for their interests, and would if they could, reduce them to the condition of slaves.

These men monopolize our officers; oppose every proposed reform that would tend to reduce the spoils of office, or improve the condition of the masses of the State. They are charged with tampering with our legislators, and procuring the passage of laws that effect the whole State, for the benefit of individuals. This same class it is, a mere handful compared with the bulk of our population, who are holding the negro in bondage, and who use the influence gained by their wealth and political standing, to ostracise and silence those noble spirits of our State, who are imbued with a love of liberty and who desire to see our fair State freed from the curse entailed on those, who, forgetting the doctrines of our fathers, that all men are born free, and with inalienable rights, are holding in bondage, men created like themselves, in the image of God.

And blinded with the clamor which these men, like the Ephesians of old, have raised for the protection of their craft, the mass of the non-slaveholders vote for continuing these destroyers of the prosperity and fair fame of our State in the Bull moss heavy [illegible] solely prostrate Kentucky. Men of [illegible] hearts [illegible] and free [illegible] shall be the rule in the State.

In any community, the working men, the life of [illegible] the [illegible] and these [illegible] into forms of usefulness and beauty, are the most valuable part of the population. Visit a city where labor is deemed honorable, and where working men are found in positions of honor and trust, and you will find it a community, blessed with material prosperity, and intellectual advancement.

Slavery degrades labor by enslaving the laborer. To be able to control the souls and bodies of enough men, to ensure a support without labor, is the object of every one in slave communities. The laborer, whatever his color, is looked on as a being low in the social scale, and for him to aspire to an equality with the oligarchs of the land, is deemed an impertinence.

Soon there comes a time in the history of a people that continue to enslave men, a time when there are in reality but two classes, masters and slaves. There may be a class that retain the shadow of freedom, but their liberty is only nominal. They are used to further the interests of the masters, or driven from the country. Let thinking non slaveholders reflect; how far is Kentucky from that point?

You may say that the poor white man may by economy acquire wealth, and rise above this condition. This may be true, in some cases, but the rule is the other way.

How can a laboring man with the necessities of a free man to supply, compete with the slave laborer, whose master only wants a fair per centage on his investment. It is impossible. They must either emigrate [illegible] hopeless [illegible] because of [illegible] they [illegible] be despised, by the master, and hated by the slave.

Who could wish for himself, or son, such a fate?

To become useful and honorable citizens of the commonwealth, it is essential that the youth of our State should all be educated. Except perhaps a few localities, slavery prevents this being done.

What do the few wealthy planters in the State care for the education of the masses? nothing at all.

Their sons at college, their daughters at boarding school, they control the legislation of the State, and take care to see, that taxes for educational purposes, do not, bear too hardly upon them. They seek to monopolize the intelligence, as they monopolize the wealth of the State.

In short every influence is brought to bear upon the non-slaveholder, to make him either a tool or an exile.

Now while these facts are true, and they are true, does it not behoove every one to use his best influence for the overthrow of slavery. Humanity, self interest, and patriotism, all unite in calling the free state men of Kentucky to action, and filling them with that love of freedom and hatred of slavery, that will nerve them to continue the contest, till the state is redeemed.

DISGRACEFUL,—R. M. Johnson, a coloured student of one of the physicians of Cleveland, has been refused admission to the Medical College in that city, on account of the colour of his skin. One of the Professors asked him to matriculate, but the threats of Southern and dough-faced students to leave the institution in case he was admitted, caused the Faculty to quail, and his application, after some disgraceful paltering, was denied. The Cleveland Leader, the organ of the Republican movement in Northern Ohio, has no word of indignation and rebuke for this shameful deed. Cowed by the vulgar spirit of colorphobia, dominant in the city, it only musters courage enough to say: "In another column will be found the statement of Mr. Johnson. We let him tell his own story, believing that every man whatever his color may be, has a right to a hearing." "A right to a hearing," forsooth! Has he not also a right to the direct support of a press which professes to be opposed to slavery and to the proscription of men on account of complexion? If The Leader has not the pluck to denounce so conspicuous an act of subserviency right under its nose, it ought never to utter another word against Northern doughfaces.

The term of naturalization in Canada has been reduced from seven to three year's residence.

OUR RELATIONS WITH GREAT BRITAIN.—WASHINGTON, Dec 6.—It has just been ascertained, beyond the possibility of cavil, that a despatch has been received from Mr. Buchanan relative to the Crampton difficulty, the tenor of which is, that the British Government, in a courteous, but positive manner, decline giving such explanations as were demanded by our Government, regarding the alleged violation of our neutrality laws by British agents. Another account says that they give too many explanations, and confuse the whole affair as much as possible.

AFFAIRS IN CENTRAL AMERICA.—The governments of San Salvador, Honduras and Costa Rica, have strongly protested to this Government against the recognition by Mr. Wheeler, U. S. Minister, of the present Nicaraguan Government. The Government of San Salvador predicts that the present order of things in Nicaragua will not long continue, for reasons stated, and declare themselves resolved to exterminate all foreign adventurers who may invade their soil for revolutionary purposes.

A bill has been introduced into the Tennessee Legislature to compel all free persons of color in the State, to emigrate to Liberia or elsewhere, beyond the limits of the State.

Cobourg is to be lighted with gas. A company has been organised for the purpose, and the whole of the capital stock subscribed.

Havoc of some Modern Battles.

The numbers killed or wounded in battle are no full index to the loss of life in war, and seldom comprise one-fourth of its actual victims; but the following figures taken from Alison's History of Europe, will give some glimpses of the terrible reality, and show its havoc to have been heretofore greater, even than now in the Crimea:

The Bridge of Lodi. The Austrians lost 2,000 killed and wounded. The French loss was also 2,000 men.

Arcola. The Austrians lost in killed and wounded, 18,000. French loss, 15,000.

The Nile (sea fight). Nelson lost 895 men in killed and wounded. The French lost 5,225, [illegible] killed and wounded, besides 3,005 prisoners, and thirteen ships out of seventeen engaged in action.

The Bay of Aboukir. The Turks had 9,000 engaged; the French 8,000. The Turks lost every man of the 9,000 in killed, wounded or prisoners.

Trebbia. During the three days that this battle continued, the French lost 12,000 men in killed and wounded, and the allies about the same number.

Regarding the campaign of 1799, the same writer observes:—"In little more than four months, the French and allied armies had lost nearly half of their collective forces, those cut off, or irrecoverably mutilated by the sword, being about 116,000 men.

Novi. The allies lost 7,000 in killed and wounded, and 12,000 prisoners. The French lost 7,300 killed and wounded, and 3,000 prisoners.

Engers. Loss in killed and wounded on each side (the French and allies) 7,000 men.

Marengo. The Austrians lost 7,000 in killed and wounded, and 3,000 prisoners; the French lost 7,000 in killed and wounded, and 1,000 prisoners.

Hohenlinden. The Austrians lost 14,000 in killed and wounded, and the French 9,000.

Austerlitz. The allies, out of 80,000 men lost 30,000 in killed and wounded, or prisoners; the French only (?) 12,000

Maida. One of the most remarkable battles on record. The French, out of 7,500 men engaged, had 700 killed between 3000 and 4000 wounded, and 100 prisoners; the British lost only 44 killed, and 284 wounded.

Jena and Auerstadt. The Prussians lost about 30 000 men killed and wounded, and nearly as many prisoners. The French lost 14,000 in killed and wounded.

Eylau. In this terrific engagement the Russians lost 25,000 in killed and wounded, and the French 30 000

Friedland. Russia lost 17,000 in killed and wounded. France 8,000.

Wagram. The Austrians and the French each lost 15 000 men in killed and wounded.

Talavera. After two days' fighting the British lost 6,268. The French lost 8,794 men in killed and wounded.

Albuera. The French loss was 8,000; that of the allies nearly 7,000 the British alone having lost 4 300 out of 7,500 engaged. When the muster of the Buffs was called after the battle, three privates and one drummer answered to their names.

Salamanca. The allies lost 5,200 men the French 14 000

Smolensko. The French loss was 17,000, that of the Russians 10 000 men.

Borodino. "The most murderous and obstinately disputed battle on record." The French lost in killed, wounded, and prisoners, 50,000 the Russians losing the same number.

"The survivors of the French army from the Russian campaign were not more than 35,000 men out of an army of about 500 000 men.

Lutzen. The French lost 18,000 and the allies 15,000 men.

Bautzen. The French lost 25,000, the allies 15,000.

Dresden. (Continued during two days). The allies lost in killed and wounded, and prisoners, 25,000; the French lost between 10,000 and 12,000.

Leipsic. The battle lasted three days. Napoleon lost two marshals, twenty generals, and about 60 000 men, in killed, wounded, and prisoners. The allies lost 1,790 officers, and about 40 000 men.

Villeria. The French lost 6,000 in killed and wounded, and 1,000 prisoners; and the allies 5,180 killed and wounded.

Toulouse. The French lost 4,700 in killed, wounded, and prisoners; the allies 4,580 men.

Paris. The allies lost 9,093 men, and the French 4,500.

Ligny. The Prussians lost 15,000 men in killed, wounded, and prisoners; and the French 6,800.

Quatre Bras. The allies lost 5,200 men, and the French 414.

Waterloo. The total loss of the allies was 16,636 men; Napoleon's was about 40,000 men, and almost all his guns, ammunition, &c.—Advocate of Peace.

RECIPES, &c.

RICE BREAD.—One and a half pounds of rice put in a gallon of water, and stirred til it becomes quite soft; then mix it, while warm, with fourteen pounds of flour, and, at the same time add a tea-spoonful of salt, and the usual quantity of yeast. Let it stand to rise, then make it into loaves, and bake it in the usual way. We have found the above quantity of flour and rice to make us twenty-eight pounds of excellent bread, and independent of the great saving, we like it better than bread baked in the usual way.—Country Gentleman.

LINEN WHITENED.—Cut up a pound of fine white soap into a gallon of milk, and hang it over the fire in the wash kettle. When the soap has entirely melted, put in the linen and boil it half an hour; then take it out; have ready [illegible] water of soap and warm water; wash the linen in it, and then rinse it through two cold waters, with a very little blue at the last.

NOTHING LIKE LEATHER.

IF YOU WOULD BE RICH,

Read this, and save your Penny.

GOOD morrow, friend, I am a stranger in your borough, can you inform me where I can get a pair of good boots made?

"Yes, sir, I can; just go to T. W. WILSON'S King St. East, Chatham next to Smith's Grocery that's the place; he will accommodate you most satisfactorily."

"Well, how is your judgment in regard to the quality of boots and shoes?"

"Most excellent—I'm an old boot and shoe maker; many are the days that I've drawn the cords."

"Where did you say I could find him?"

"Why, the next door to Mr. Andrew Smith's Grocery, corner of King and William Streets, Ease any person can tell you."

"Will you conduct me there?"

"I will with pleasure; for I know him to be, from experience, one of the best manufacturers of BOOTS AND SHOES in town. His stock is of his own manufacture, and he has always on hand a superior quality for gentlemen's wear. He's also very particular in getting up his work; so I'm confident he can't fail to give reasonable satisfaction to those who favor him with their patronage."

"There are some boot makers whose work is beautiful to the eye, but pinguy pinching to the feet; and I have lumps upon each instep, which in foul weather give me excruciating pain."

"Ah, yes, too much have I suffered by fetters from the boot mutilders hands; but he's not one of them; he endeavours to make a systematic fit, measuring from joint to heel, and from lump to toe—closely observing the most minute protuberances, if there be any upon the feet; and he seldom fails to make his boots set as easy thereon as a glove upon a lady's tender finger. Besides, he always keeps a superior stock on hand; perhaps you might obtain a pair upon the instant, that would fit your feet and please the eye."

"Then I must trade with him."

"Try him, of course, and you'll save at each end of your bargain. First—you'll buy cheaper—secondly, your boots will wear you longer."

"Come, let's go."

"I'm ready—Are you a cash man?"

"I am; for he who pays cash clips the discount of credit, and secures it in his own pocket."

"Then that's the place, for his motto reads"—
Ask of me no trust, when you come to buy;
Ask of me no trust, for you I must deny;
Ask of me no trust, it hath destroyed many;
Ask of me no trust. I cannot grant you any;
Ask of me no trust, but with your cash rally;
Ask of me no trust, nor with my pocket dally.

FORGERY.

The Counterfeit Radway's Ready Relief in Canada.

THE LIVES OF THE PEOPLE IN DANGER.

THE public are cautioned against purchasing a counterfeit of Radway's Ready Relief, which is now circulating through the Canadas — We are informed that parties at Hamilton, C.W. have been selling a spurious article of our Ready Relief, for the genuine to dealers. This is not only a fraud upon us, but is a most wicked imposition on the public. The wretch that will knowingly lend himself to so vile and treacherous a trick, for the gain of a few extra sixpences, is unsafe to deal with, and should be shunned by all respectable dealers, for if a few sixpences will induce him to rob the distressed sufferer of hope and health and to place the invalid's life in danger, he would not scruple to deceive his best customers.

Dealers who wish the genuine, purchase only of established credit, not of irresponsible pedlars or travelling adventurers and impostors.

Dealers who have R. R. R. offered to them below our regular price, may rely upon the article being a counterfeit preparation. We never sell R. R. R. in large quantities for less than 10 per cent. from our regular gross price. Dealers who purchase the counterfeit and offer the same for sale, render themselves liable to prosecution.

All of our travellers and authorized Agents have a power of Attorney signed by us authorizing them in our name, to transact business.

The following are our only Agents in Hamilton, C. W. T. BICKLE & SON; HAMILTON, KNEESHAW & CO., in Toronto, LYMAN BROTHERS, & CO. are our general agents—we also sell to SIMPSON & CO.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1856.

THE

SATURDAY EVENING POST.

ESTABLISHED AUGUST 4TH, 1821.

Weekly Edition between 80,000 and 90,000

IN issuing their Prospectus for 1856, the proprietors of the Post take it for granted, that the public are already tolerably well acquainted with the character of a paper that has grown strong during the storms and sunshine of THIRTY-FOUR YEARS. Their object always has been as it remains to be, to publish a weekly paper for the family circle, which shall not only amuse, but also instruct and improve, those who may read it. To accomplish this object, the best articles are selected from [illegible] and original articles of an instructive character, procured when possible.

Letters from Foreign Journals; the most interesting portions of the Weekly News of the World; Sketches of Life, Adventure and Character; Selected and Original Articles upon Agriculture; Account of the Produce and Stock Markets; and a Bank Note List are included among the solid information to be constantly found in the Post.

But the mind requires a wider range—it has faculties which delight in the humorous and lively the imaginative and poetical. These faculties also must have their appropriate food, else they become enfeebled, and, as a consequence, the intellect becomes narrow and one-sided, and is not able to take an enlarged and generous view of human nature and its destiny. To satisfy these Heaven-implanted cravings of our mental being, we devote a fair proportion of the Post to FICTION, POETRY, and HUMOR.

Among our contributors in the first two of the above departments, are several of the most gifted writers in the land. We also draw freely for Fiction and Poetry upon the best periodicals in this country and Great Britan. We design commencing a New Story by MRS. SOUTHWORTH, author of "The Deserted Wife," "Miriam," &c. in our first paper for January next.

Engravings—illustrative of important places and actions, of Agricultural and other new Inventions, with others of a Humorous, though refined character, are also freely given.

The Postage on the Post to any part of the United States, paid quarterly or yearly in advance, at the office where it is received, is only 25 cents a year.

Terms.—The Terms of the Post are Two Dollars, if paid in advance; Three Dollars, if not paid in advance. For Five Dollars, in advance, one copy is sent three years. We continue the following low terms for Clubs, to be sent, in the city, to one address, and, in the country, to one Post Office.

4 Copies,	per annum	$ 5
8 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$10
13 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$15
20 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$20

Persons residing in British North America must remit twenty-five cents in addition to the subscription price, as we have to prepay the United States postage.

ADDITIONS TO CLUBS.—Any person having sent the money and names for a Club, may add new names to it at the same rate, provided the latter will allow their subscriptions to end at the same time those of the main list do. We will willingly supply the back numbers, if we have them. Our object is to have all the subscriptions in each Club end at the same time, and thus prevent confusion.

The money for Clubs must always be sent in advance. When the sum is large, a draft should be procured if possible—the cost of which may be deducted from the amount.

Post-Masters or others sending for Clubs, would confer a favor by having them sent to one address, when they can do so conveniently.

The papers to Clubs are invariably stopped at the expiration of the period for which they have been sent.

A NEW ARRANGEMENT.—Our subscribers will take notice that we now have no collecting agents out of this State. They will therefore please remit to us direct.

All persons addressing letters to us should be careful to give the name of the State, as well as of the town, in which they live. All letters must be post-paid.

Subscribers wishing their paper changed, will please give the name of the Post-Office to be changed from, as well as the Post-Office they wish it hereafter sent to.

We trust that such of our old friends, the Post-Masters, as do not feel inclined to take advantage of our liberal offers themselves, will show our Prospectus to other influential and responsible persons who will be willing to raise Clubs, &c.

A MORE "IMPORTANT NOTICE!"

American Tract Society—Slavery.

THE Independent, of New York, in an article [illegible] on the Publishing House of the American Tract Society, has the following — [illegible] years, one of the greatest institutions of evangelical Christendom, has been testifying in fact, that the institution of Slavery, the buying and selling of human beings, and the profession of the slave-trader, are less offensive to God, less contary to the Gospel, less perilous to the souls of men, than the practice of dancing. It has attempted to exhibit and authenticate, on the widest scale, an administration of Christianity, in which there shall be no more syllable of rebuke for crimes that shock the morals sense of Christendom. The influence of the Tract Society has tended to make the Southern churches more timid and cowed in the presence of the imperious slave-trading interest. As a consequence of this policy—partly, but not exclusively—behold the SOUTHERN APOSTACY!"

In December 1841, a report of "The" Committee of the Synod of New York and New Jersey, on the subject of the mutilations of books by the American Tract Society," was published; and in that report, the mutilations and omissions in the editions published, by that Society, of D'Aubigne's History of the Great Reformation, were pointed out—besides, there are the omissions and expurgations in other books published, as to the vile sin of Slavery, and the substitution of sentences other than the original.

The notice by me entitled, "Publications," preferable to these matters, has been widely circulated, and a Canadian public are again reminded of their duty.

Exhibitions and Lectures.

THE Undersigned proposes exhibiting the

Diorama of Uncle Tom's Cabin,

in the principal Cities, Towns, and Villages in the Northern States and Canada: and to accompany them with abundant evidence as to the truthfulness of the facts assumed by the author, in the work known by that name, which will include [illegible] some most mysterious and thrilling incidents in the history of his own family. The flight of his parents for freedom—their capture, and return to slavery and their second flight; a history of their lost boys, who were stolen and sold into slavery—the death of one of them, and the redemption of the other by the purchase of himself; and the final purchase for the enormous sum of five thousand dollars.

The paintings, comprising the scenes of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," are the production of an eminent French artist, and show as large as life, and represent the most prominent scenes and characters in the work.

In order to render our labors more effectual and create more general interest and benefit, we propose the following arrangements, viz:—To give one half of the receipts to any Church or Society, or regularly appointed committee by the puplic, who will provide a place, secure an audience, and defray the expenses incident to the meeting.

An arrangement by which every Church or Society in the country may replenish their funds, aid their pastors, or whatever other benevolent object that commends itself to public patronage.

Let such then who would help the cause, help themselves, and help us in our feeble endeavours to enlist the public ear to the cries of bleeding humanity; go at once to work, communicate immediately with us preparatory to an exhibition.

We shall not however confine ourselves to that deplorable and humiliating aspect of the colored man's case, represented in that work.

But we promise at no distant date, a new programme of very different scenes, representing not only an entirely original, but a far more hopeful aspect of the black man, than has ever been presented to the American public.

It is neither egotism, nor yet flattery, in us to say that this mode of giving instruction possesses the double merit of engaging those two most important faculties that man possesses—the mind and the sight at the same time, and making an ineffacable impression. It is not as being necessarily dependent and degraded, then that, we shall confine our exhibitions of his character.

There have been places where, and times when the black man of modern times has proven himself the patriot, the statesman, and the warrior. As such, then, let him be known to the world, that it may acknowledge it, and to our youth, that they may imitate their example and copy their virtues.

We suffer more perhaps, from false representation, than all other ills put together.

Those amongst us who have acted the part of patriot are represented to be vicious and ungovernable: and those whom the most direful and [illegible] prejudices have debarred from the opportunities for higher development are represented as submissive willing underlings. Generation after generation are stamped with the same false impressions, and learn to assume it on the one hand, and regard it as a fixed inevitable fact on the other.

We are arranging a new and a very extensive programme of Distinguished Colored Men and the incidents with which they have been connected and acquitted themselves honorably—such as ATTICUS, "the first martyr of the Revolution," the "Colored Regiments at the Battle of New Orleans," and the distinguished and most prominent "black leaders" who freed the first spot discovered by Columbus, that was first desecrated to slavery—Hispanola—now Hayti.

I have endeavored to make the arrangements sufficiently liberal to meet the patronage and engage the attention of all who have an interest in our common cause.

For further important particulars, you will write me, (post paid.)

A HISTORY OF ALL NATIONS,

OR

UNIVERSAL HISTORY:

IN WHICH THE HISTORY OF EVERY NATION, ANCIENT AND MODERN, IS SEPARATELY GIVEN.

Illustrated by 70 Stylographic Maps and 700 Engravings

By S. G. GOODRICH,

AUTHOR OF 'PICTORIAL GEOGRAPHY OF THE WORLD,' 'PARLEY'S CABINET LIBRARY,' 'PARLEY'S TALES,' &c.

Complete in one imperial octavo volume, of more than twelve hundred pages of double column letter-press; and upwards of seven hundred elegant illustrations.

It is believed that a Universal History, suitable in form, extent, and arrangement, to the wants of the mass of American readers, has never been presented to the public. For this reason, and in compliance with numerous suggestions from those entitled to respect, the author has undertaken the formidable task of supplying one of a popular character and for general use.

A reader of history should always have in mind two things—viz., the place where, and the time when, an event happened. In the present work therefore, the geography of each country whose history is carefully given; and to aid the reader seventy stylographic maps have been added. Careful attention, also, has been paid to Chronology, so that, at every page and every chapter, the reader may find the dates of the events which are described.

In order to avoid the confusion which inevitably arises from [illegible] the [illegible] history of mankind in a general chronological view, the author has adopted an ethnographic arrangement, by which he presents each nation separately The advantages of this plan for a popular treatise, are obvious. The mind of the reader is not overtasked by a boundless extent of view, nor bewildered by a perplexing multiplicity of objects. On the contrary, everything is clear and distinct. Events, instead of being forced out of their true place and connection, are presented in easy and natural succession, thus imparting to the work the attraction and interest of continuous narrative. Another advantage of the plan is, that it not merely admits, but invites descriptive details, illustrative anecdotes, personal adventures and sketches of character, all of which serve not only to give life and effect to the pages of the historian, but to impart the colors of truth and reality to the pictures he may present.

While the work thus presents a separate and distinct history, and also exhibits the present state of every nation, ancient and modern, including the recent revolutions in Europe, still, for the purpose of showing how nations have acted upon or influenced the destinies of one another, General Views are given, at suitable periods, presenting the great movement of mankind, as one family, in its onward march from the past to the present time.

It is proper to state, that while the author promises only a compilation, yet he has endeavored to choose from the highest and best authorities; and while the work is offered as a popular treatise, it still seeks to present the practical results of philosophic investigation; and finally, that while justice is rendered to the classic ages, the whole work is written in the spirit of modren civilization—which places justice above power, prefers peace to war, and regards the Christian, rather than the soldier, as the true hero of our race.

The work is illustrated with

For the Provincial Freeman.

THE SPIRIT OF LIBERTY.

It dwells among the mountains,
It lingers in the vale;
'Tis gurgled from the fountains,
It speaks in every gale.

'Tis heard where mother Ocean,
Her dashing spray doth pour,
And where, in wild commotion,
The waking billows roar.

All Nature bears its impress,
And owns its ruling rod—
The impress of the Deity—
The voice of Nature's God.

From the Liberator.

An English Woman's view of Slavery.

White women of the Southern States, from lethargy awake!
Awake! arouse your energies, for woman-hood's dear sake!
Oh, women of the Southern States, while slavery survives,
You're your lords' harem mistresses; you are not Christian wives.

White matrons of the Southern States, who tremble at your frown?
Your husbands' darker concubines! Is this your marriage crown?
To live among such wretched ones, of sanctity deprives
The tie that binds in wedlock Southern husbands and their wives.

White mothers of the Southern States, till slavery's chains ye break,
Do not your sons, your hope and pride, their fathers' guilt partake?
Does not that careless mother, who at slavery connives,
Rear her daughters but for harem-chiefs, not pure and holy wives?

White maidens of the Southern States, who grow up loved and free,
Torn from their father-master's house, your darker sisters see!
Oh, share not in the villain-gold that buys those sisters' lives,
Making degraded concubines those God-meant sacred wives.

White women of the Southern States, for womanhood's dear sake,
Bid slavery cease from your fair land; from lethargy awake!
'Tis yours to set th' oppressed free—and that glad time arrives,
When only holy ties surround your sanctity as wives.

Miscellaneous.

From the Dollar Weekly Times.

Influence of a Good Newspaper;

OR,

What Farmer Smith Accomplished by Stopping his Subscription.

BY INVISIBLE GREEN, ESQUIRE.

CHAPTER I.

"Turn to the press—its teeming sheets survey,
Big with the wonders of each passing day;
Births, deaths and weddings, forgeries, fires and wrecks,
Harangues and hailstone, brawls and broken necks."

It was a happy evening in the farm-house of Farmer Smith. John, the youngest son had returned from the village, and as he neared the house, waved a copy of the Dollar——high above his head, to indicate, that the mail was punctual and had brought the ever welcome weekly messenger to its subscribers. Farmer Smith immediately, bid his sons cease their labor, and repair to the house.

"Now, that the paper has come," he said, Your mother and sisters will hurry to prepare supper, that we may have a long evening to enjoy the news."

The sons did not need further urging, and in a few minutes the family were seated around the supper table, dispatching the meal with more haste than good health warranted.

"Did you look into the paper, John?" asked the father, after he had taken a sip of tea.

"Yes, sir, I read the telegraphic news."

"Well, what is in it? Let us hear."

"It contains important news from the Crimea," answered the intelligent lad. "After a hard struggle, the Allies have succeeded in taking Sebastopol."

"Have taken Sebastopol!" exclaimed half a-dozen.

"Yes, sir," continued John, "but at a great sacrifice of life. Thousand were killed in the assault."

"Is it possible!" remarked the old gentleman, "Well, I must acknowledge, that the news startles me. The Russians had so long baffled every attempt of the Allies to gain entrance into the city, that I had made up my mind that the French and English must retreat in shame from the Crimea."

"I thought differently, father," said Washington, the eldest son; "In the last number of the Dollar——, the editor commented upon the affairs in the Crimea, and showed conclusively that, with good generalship, Sebastopol must fall before the approach of another winter. I formed my opinion from the facts he presented."

"What a terrible destruction of life!" exclaimed Mrs. Smith. "It makes the heart shudder to think of the thousands widowed or rendered fatherless by this one battle alone. And how many poor husbands and sons, among the wounded, are now suffering more than death, in the dreary and badly managed military hospitals of the vicinity, with no mother to administer to their wants, or sisters to cheer them in their affliction."

"But, thank Heaven," remarked Sarah, he eldest daughter, "they have a heroic Miss Nightingale to soothe their sufferings."

"Bad enough! bad enough!" exclaimed farmer Smith, "but we will speak farther of this after supper. What is the latest commercial intelligence, John?"

"The last steamer's news has had a favorable effect on breadstuffs. In C——flour advanced four shillings a barrel, in twenty-four hours."

"Is it possible! How fortunate that our wheat is still in the barn!"

"Indeed, it is," remarked Adeline, as she gave her elder brother a merry glance.

"A secret?" asked the father, who was used to interpreting such glances. "You have not sold the grain, Washington.

"No, father, but I came plaguey near it. While you was down to village yesterday, Mr. Brown, the miller, came over, and endeavored to drive a bargain for the grain. He offered a shade over the market prices and I was about closing with him, when Ad. came up. She seemed to suspect instantly that all was not right, and persuaded me to wait until we received the newspaper to-day and learned the condition of the C.——market, which you know, always affects ours. I told Mr. Brown to call again to-day, but he has not done so."

"Ah! yes, I see into it," said farmer Smith, "He has received the news in advance, by express, and wishes to buy on speculation. It was fortunate that Ad. thought of the newspaper, which by-and-by, has become almost her bible. Experience ought to have taught you, Washington, not to sell so near mail day. The Dollar——always gives us the latest intelligence, and through its information we can form as correct an estimation of the value of our products as most shrewd speculators. Before I became a subscriber to it, we were continually being victimized by those men; but now, none of them can get ahead of us. In this respect alone I have saved fifty, yes a hundred times more than my subscription money."

"And that is not all, father," remarked Washington; "in the agricultural department of the paper, we, every week, obtain valuable information relative to the management of the farm. I candidly believe, that our savings in this respect will amount to twenty per cent, as we raise better stock have better crops, and, by systemtizing our labor have less hired help than formerly. It is astonishing how much useful agricultural information is imparted in that news paper. It appears to me that I could not get along on the farm without it."

"That is all true enough, brother Washington," remarked John, but the paper is more interesting to me in other respects. Its historical sketches of our own and other countries are full of interest; and some of the many talented contributors are sure to give us something to instruct and please every week. It is a library, and a useful one within itself.

"I am sure," remarked Mr. Smith "that the paper is invaluable about the house. We never fail to find in it useful recommendations relative to house-keeping! Before you become a subscriber for the paper, my dear," she remarked to her husband, "much of my time was employed in instructing the girls in the kitchen. Now I refer them to the Dollar——."

"The late fashions, the sweet poetry, and the charming stories, is what makes the paper attractive to me," said Adeline, pertly casting her eyes at her father.

"Yes, you little rogue," responded the sire, your heart and your tongue are full of sentimentality. You can't milk a cow without talking to her of the latest style, or turn a corn cake without rehearsing a poetical extract. Indeed I cannot imagine what will become of you."

"Why I tell you, father," was Adeline's reply, "all this will result in my becoming an authoress, and a contributor to the Dollar——. I know you will love that."

"Ah, you little rogue, I see you are determined to distinguish yourself," said the father to his pet, "and I suppose I must let you have your own way."

After supper, the family gathered in a circle, and one being chosen for the reader, spent the news. It was a happy sight, to see an entire family, united by intelligence and love, thus enriching their minds, from the proudest gift of the age—the family newspaper.

CHAPTER II.

"In other men we fault can spy,
And blame the mote that dims their eye;
Each little speck and blemish find:
To our own stronger errors blind."

One week after the above day, farmer Smith visited the village for the purpose of attending to some matters of business, and with the intention of calling at the post office on his way, and receiving the number of his newspaper that day due. At "Jones' corner" he met Mr. Black, the leading attorney of the village, and after the usual salutation, farmer Smith enquired:

"Has the mail arrived?"

"Oh, yes," replied attorney Black.

"And has brought our paper of course."

"The Dollar——?"

"Certainly. We take no other newspaper in this vicinity."

"You are zealous. When you see this week's number, I am inclined to think you will alter your opinion, somewhat."

"Indeed! why, what's the matter?" asked farmer Smith, in astonishment.

"Why the editor comes down on our candidates, and condemns our new political movement with great severity."

"Is it possible? Well, I must acknowledge that I am surprised. Does he give any reasons for this unaccountable step?"

"Reasons! Can he give any? Knowing that many of the supporters of our movement were subscribers to his paper, it was his duty, if he could not sustain us, to remain silent on the question."

"Yes he ought to have done that."

"But I think I can see through it all. The opposition to our movement, I am confident, does not arise from honest motives."

"I suspect that myself," said Farmer Smith, his feelings becoming somewhat excited.

"The truth is," continued the attorney, the editor has been bought. That is the conclusion we have all come to, and we have determined to apply our only remedy—to stop our subscriptions forthwith!"

"That is right," responded the farmer; "we must not sustain a newspaper that will not support our principles."

"Then you will unite with us?"

"Certainly. I authorize you to stop my paper immediately. I will not touch it again."

"Good for you. I was certain that would be your decision, and now I am confident that by the next mail we can send Mr. Editor a document that will make him stare. I hope that every subscriber at this post-office will stop his subscription."

"So do I. But then we will have some difficulty in getting all to consent to it. It is such a good newspaper that——"

"I never could see anything so extraordinarily good about it," interrupted the lawyer. "It may suit women and children, but it never was the paper for a man of business."

"I differ with you there, neighbor Black," responded the farmer. "I have never met a newspaper like it. It has exerted a most beneficial influence in my family, uniting more firmly the happy ties of the domestic circle, and saving me in the management of my affairs hundreds of dollars. Indeed, I do not know how I can get along without it now, and——"

"You are disposed to relent, then, and still lend your money and influences to the support of a newspaper, which oppose your candidates for office"

"No, no, you are mistaken neighbor Black. While we acknowledge that the paper is invaluable to me, I am determined to stop my subscription. I have authorized you to act for me, and can do so, without further parley. The course of the editor seems to me an outrage, and we must bring him to his senses, by withholding our support. Without patrons, he can do us but little harm."

"Good. I am glad to see you so independent With a little exertion we will break the concern down, in less than a month."

After some further similar conversation the two parted, both determined to do their utmost in destroying the Dollar——. Farmer Smith, afterwards saw a copy of the paper, and read the obnoxious article, and became so excited that he declared he would not have the paper. if it was printed with gold and furnished him gratuitously. He returned home that evening in rather a crabby mood, and his feelings were still further excited by the universal regret in the family, that the paper had been stopped. Mrs. Smith became fretful, Adeline wept, while the sons saddled their horses and rode to town to overcome their disappointment. Death could not have shed a greater gloom over the family circle of farmer Smith, but it only served to make the head of the family more determined on his course.

Several months rolled away, and there was a great change in neighbor Smith's family. The sons had acquired the habit of "running to town" to learn the news, and were neglectful of their duties on the farm.

The daughters finding home less attractive than formerly, now sought delight in gossiping visits to the neighbors, and were continually getting into trouble. The mother worried by the change in the habits of her children, became fretful and ill-humored. Farmer Smith himself was forced to complain that the world was running wild, and getting worse and worse every day. He had not only experienced, even in so short a time, a disagreeable change in the family, but had what he called bad luck in disposing of his products, just at a time when the prices began to raise. He knew full well the cause of this great change, but he consoled himself with the reflection that he had "vindicated his principles," by stopping his subscription to the Dollar——, and had no doubt ruined the editor and the paper, who had dared to oppose what he believed was right. It is true that on several occasions, when, in sober reflection, he partly regretted the absence of his once favorite newspaper, and might have been constrained to renew his subscription, if he had not been confident that it had died for want of patronage. Not a copy of it came to his post office, and he was sure that it was dead, and that he had helped to kill it.

"Yes, 'twas a moonlight night,
The little dog gazed upon;
And though he barked with dread affright,
Yet still the moon shone on."

A few more months rolled on, there was no change in Farmer Smith's household Another crop had been gathered, but, from inattention to the farm, it fell far short of the one of the year previous. Farmer Smith's troubles increased, and time was fast making its sure impress upon his countenance. One evening, he was sitting at the door of his farmhouse, when a young man drove up in a buggy.

"Farmer Smith, I believe," said the young man, addressing him.

"That is what I am called," replied the farmer.

"I understand that you have a large quantity of potatoes on hand."

"About one thousand bushels, I believe."

"Do you wish to sell them?"

"Well, yes, if I can get my price."

"What do you ask for them?"

"I believe they are giving sixty cents a bushel down in the village, and I wouldn't like to take less."

"Suppose I take the whole lot, just as they lay."

"You can't have them a cent less."

"I'll give you fifty-five cents a bushel and pay you the cash down."

"Not a cent less than sixty. I'll let them rot first."

"You are too hard. But I want the potatoes to fulfill a contract, and must have them. Shall we close the bargain at sixty?"

"Just as you please,"

After the potatoes had been examined, the bargain was accordingly closed, and Farmer Smith received the money and gave a receipt.

"What contract have you to fulfill?" asked the farmer of the stranger.

"Well, I must acknowledge," was the reply, "that I have deceived you in that respect. I have been stopping several days at the village, and when the mail came in today, I learned that potatoes had raised fifty cents a bushel in C——, during the last three days."

"Fifty cents a bushel!" exclaimed farmer Smith in astonishment.

"Yes, fifty cents, still going up. I knew that you had a large lot on hand, and presuming that you would not be likely to get the news soon, I came out immediately. I can return to the village and get one dollar a bushel for your potatoes without touching them. Something of a speculation, farmer Smith," he said, slapping him on the shoulder, and laughing in his face, "but then you know it is not your fault, AS YOU DON'T TAKE THE PAPERS."

Leaving the farmer almost transfixed with astonishment, the young man jumped into his buggy, and was about leaving for town when Mr. Smith awakened from his reverie and asked—

"Say, sir, what papers did you get the news in?"

"In the Dollar——, to be sure"

"The Dollar——!" exclaimed the farmer, in the height of astonishment, "is the paper still published?"

"Certainly it is. Why do you ask that?"

"Mercy on me! I stopped my subscription a year ago, and I was sure it had killed the paper."

"Ha! ha! well you are green, and deserve to get only half price for your potatoes. The Dollar——seems to have more subscribers now than ever."

"Astonishing!" continued the farmer, "why nobody takes it here—they all stopped their subscriptions."

"Yes, and found they could not get along without it, and gladly renewed their subscriptions again," said the young man, as he cracked his whip and drove away.

It was many minutes before farmer Smith recovered from his astonishment. His first act then was to saddle his horse, ride to town, and renew his subscription to the Dollar——. I have only to add, that now farmer Smith's family again feels THE HAPPY INFLUENCE OF A GOOD NEWSPAPER.

Fight between a Cow and Leopard.

About three years ago, a leopard took it into his head to try the beefsteaks of a very savage and sharp horned cow, who, with her calf, was the property of the blacksmith. It was a dark rainy night, the blacksmith and his wife were in bed, and the cow and the calf were nestled in the warm straw in the cattle-shed. The door was locked, and all was apparently secure, when the hungry leopard prowled stealthily round the cow-house, sniffing the prey within. The scent of the leopard at once aroused the keen senses of the cow, made doubly acute by her anxiety for her little charge, and she stood ready for the danger as the leopard, having mounted on the roof, commenced scratching his way through the thatch. Down he sprang! but at the same instant, with a splendid charge, the cow pinned him against the wall, and a battle ensued which can easily be imagined. A cooley slept in the corner of the cattle-shed, whose wandering senses were completely scattered when he found himself the unwilling umpire of the fight. He rushed out and shut the door. In a few minutes he succeeded in awakening the blacksmith, who struck a light, and proceeded to load a pistol, the only weapon that he possessed. During the whole of this time the bellowing of the cow, the roars of the leopard, and the thumping, trampling, and shuffling which proceeded from the cattle-shed, explained the savage nature of the fight. The blacksmith, who was no sportsman, shortly found himself with a lanthorn in one hand, a pistol in the other, and no idea of what he meant to do. He waited, therefore at the cattle-shed door, and holding the light so as to shine through the numerous small apertures in the shed, he looked in. The leopard no longer growled; but the cow was mad with fury. She alternately threw a large dark mass above her head, then quickly pinned it to the ground on its descent, then bored it against the wall, as it crawled helplessly towards a corner of the shed. This was the "beefeater" in reduced circumstances! The gallant little cow had nearly killed him, and was giving him the finishing strokes. The blacksmith perceived the leopard's helpless state, and boldly opening the door, he discharged his pistol, and the next moment was bolting as hard as he could run with the warlike cow after him She was regularly "up," and was ready for anything or anybody. However, she was at length pacified, and the dying leopard was put out of his misery.

A MUSICAL PRODIGY.—One of the most remarkable specimens of humanity—remarkable in more respects than one—is a little negro boy six years of age, who was brought from Columbus, in this State, and is now to be seen at the City Hotel. He has been blind from his birth, is wholly untutored, and yet possessed of the most wonderful capacity for making, and the enjoyment of musical sounds. It can hardly be regarded in the light of a mere talent, for it seems to absorb his whole nature, leaving room for no other faculty or passion. Upon all else his mind appears to be a blank.

Upon invitation of the gentleman who has him in charge, we called to see the little African wonder. Upon his being led into the room, some one struck the keys of the piano; but a single note was sounded, yet in an instant, frantic with his ruling and we think only passion, he broke loose from the person who had him in charge, and flew wildly in the direction from which the sound proceeded. When he reached the instrument, he crawled, or was lifted upon the stool, when he set to with a perfect energy of enthusiasm, seeming to devour with rapture the sweet tones brought forth by his magical little fingers. We heard him in several popular airs and a few most difficult operatic selections, and hardly knew which most to admire, the accuracy of the performance or the effect upon himself. Such is the delicacy and tenacity of his ear, that he will play off the most difficult pieces after they are heard for the first time, and as an argument in favor of the scientific achievements of the great masters which appear ridiculous and unmeaning to half the world. they are the pieces that call forth his greatest enthusiasm. Upon the whole, he is a wonderful freak of nature, and deserves not only to be seen but to be studied.

We are requested to state that he will be brought forward for exhibition as soon as a suitable room can be obtained.—Savannah Republican, Nov. 20.

SINGULAR DISCOVERY.—The Rochester (N. Y.) Union states that Mr. C. E. Davis, butcher, in Centre Market, took from the stomach of an ox, which he slaughtered, a hollow-bone, in which were two nails and the handle of a silver teaspoon. The bone had been so long in the stomach of the animal, that the rough edges and corners of the broken bone were worn smooth and the surface was polished.

Will Farming Pay?

He that by the plow would thrive,
Himself must either hold or drive.
FRANKLIN.

All things are conditional. Experience affirms that farming has been the basis of the world's progress since the creation of man. It has paid for all the real wealth of all countries from time immemorial, and can be made to pay through all coming time, while the laws of nature remain the same. Practical men affirm that one-third will pay the cost of production, hence the safety of capital invested in judicious farming. Like all other business, it must be conducted wisely, according to varying circumstances, to produce the best results; but as things are, it pays better on the average, in the long run, than any other business on the same amount of capital. But its pecuniary success is not all; it pays in health far beyond any other business known. It combines in its duties the natural life of man, giving him his needed exercise, physical, mental, and moral, in a truly natural way, and consequently the most healthful.

"Health is the vital principle of bliss,
And exercises of health. In proof of this,
Behold the wretch who slugs his life away,
Soon swallowed in disease's sad abyss."

It will pay in independence, the true condition of real manhood. To feel free and independent of any pecuniary obligation to our fellow-man brings a degree of happiness seldom found in mercantile or commercial life. The owner of a good farm can think and speak his own thoughts without injuring the price or sale of his corn or losing a customer. When good wheat or beef is brought to market, the article demands for itself the highest praise and price, irrespective of the party or opinions of the producer. Not so in stores or shops. We must be squared by popular forms of faith, creeds, and politics, or be shunned by the multitude, who fear to tread upon advanced ground.

Independence is natural to man; he yearns for it, and will not stop short of it until broken down in despair. The instincts of his nature break forth under oppression in the significant inquiry of the immortal Burns:

"If I'm designed yon lordling's slave—
By nature's law designed,
Why was an independent wish
E'er planted in my mind?"

It will pay in happiness, the only object and end of a rational life Enjoyment makes existence endurable. Circumstances contribute to this condition. Farming offers the most for the heart and mind of man. Variety is the spice of life. No occupation calls for more varied labor than scientific farming. All the natural sciences are of use to the intelligent farmer, such as botany, geology, chemistry, etc. His success depends upon the judicious application of knowledge derived from nature's laws.

The farm is the college of nature, whose philosophical apparatus and library are free. Every sense can be rationally gratified according to its normal desires. Inexhaustible sources of happiness are within the farmer's reach. The earth, air, and water speak in a significant language to the free inquirer after truth. There are "tongues in trees, sermons in stones, books in the running brooks, and good in every thing." "The lilies of the field toil not, neither do they spin, and yet Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these."

"Oh, how canst thou renounce the boundless store
Of charms which nature to her votary yields?
The warbling woodlands, the resounding shore,
The pomp of groves and garniture of fields."

No home can equal the farmer's in all the combined facilities for domestic joys. A man of taste, order, and arrangement can surround himself on a farm with comforts more satisfying to his whole nature than in any other situation in life. A garden of ample dimensions, filled with fruits, vegetables, and flowers of every hue and variety; a large door-yard planted with ornamental shrubs and trees, overspread with green, are enough to charm the eye and delight the heart. Then that cool, waterproof cellar under an ice-house, preserving through summer's heat every perishable luxury the palate can desire. And that large kitchen-cellar well stored with winter fruits and vegetables, bidding gaunt famine depart in peace; those well-filled barns and stables are more reliable for discount and deposit than Wall Street banks or exchange-offices; the farm is the only proper place to rear a family. Children brought into life without their knowledge or consent, should be born under the most favorable circumstances, and be well brought up physiologically, else their existence may be a curse rather than a blessing to them and the world—a consideration worthy of the attention of every lover of his race.

How to Make your own Yeast.

To the Editor of the Times.

SIR:—

As you have succeeded in giving instructions to your readers how to grind their own wheat, and where to get an oven to bake it, to render your services complete, I send you, the following recipe for yeast. The new system will be incomplete without it. That the housekeeper may be independent both of the brewer and that compound called German yeast, I will give it you in plain language:—

Monday morning boil 2oz. of the best hops in four quarts of water for half an hour; strain it, and let the liquor cool down to new milk warmth; then put in a small handful of salt and half a pound of brown sugar; beat up one pound of the best flour with some of the liquor, and then mix all well together.

On Wednesday add three pounds of potatoes boiled and then mashed, to stand till Thursday; then strain it, and put it into bottles, and it is ready for use. N. B. It must be stirred frequently while it is making, and kept near the fire.

Before using, shake the bottle well up. It will keep in a cool place for two months, and is best at the latter part of the time; the beauty of this yeast is that it ferments spontaneously, not requiring the aid of other yeast; and, if care be taken to let it ferment well in the earthen bowl in which it is made, you may cork it up tight when bottled. I put mine into Seltzer-water bottles, and this quantity fills four. I have used it now for many months, and never had lighter bread than it affords, without any failure.

Yours, &c., D. S. Y.

Mrs. Partington at a Sunday Concert.

"Who is that?" said Mrs. Partington, in a big whisper, at the Music Hall, on Sunday night, during the performance of the oratorio of Soloman. "That's Solomon," said the one she addressed, tapping out the time on his thumb, with the libretto. "And these in front," said she, pointing to the ladies on the platform, "are some of his seven hundred wives, I s'pose, and the men up behind 'em, must be the children of Israel. Well, Solomon must have been a wise man to know how to take care of so many wives, but he wasn't any better than he should be, if all stories are true. Ah, what blessed music that is to be sure! How much better than that which folks hears on week-a-days in playhouses, played on godless fiddles!" She seated herself in an attentive attitude listening to the music, while Ike sat counting the new gas lights round the hall, and drumming "Jordan" on the arm of the settee.

A Happy New Year.

It was well sung by one of the bards—

"We take no note of time, but by its loss."

The clock, minute by minute, ticks out the hours—the hours consume the day—the days make up the year—and it is gone! Its record is sealed. We cannot recall it. All we can hope to do is to profit for the opening Future by the Past's stern lessons. Years are the warp of life—the thought, the feeling, the act, the filling—the woof.

"Go tell the young, the gay, the fair, to weave it well."

Thus spake the angel seer: thus speaks the Past with its myriad voices; thus speaks the year gone—"Weave it well."

We remember having seen a beautiful steel plate engraving, at one time, and a fine painting at another, each representing youth embarking in a tiny canoe upon the winding stream of Life. The good angel, Hope, bade him speed on towards the goal of his ambition—a radiant temple, away down in the distance. And as we remember that pictured fact, we review the year, and call to mind its Life-simile imprinted upon our heart of hearts. The Good Angel gave us a Little Life: its little barque was launched with a bright June sun to bless it—with flowers of every hue to smile upon its passage—with untiring hands to serve its every desire—and Hope pointed to the bright earthly goal beyond—but less than a quarter year found its tiny barque, like that of his prototype, too delicate to breast the surges alone, and the Good Angel (we saw him through our tears) took him to his bosom. The casement in which that Young Life was enshrined, we laid away to rest, in its narrow Woodland home. So all of life

"From cradle to grave the years—
Whether crowded or void—
There is no union here of hearts
Which finds not here an end."

Thus Sorrow, with its raven wing, has brooded over many during the past. And as the cycle of the years move on, Sorrow will still brood, and still be young.

And yet we can be happy. The past year brought us blessings—let us be thankful for it. We can say, as said Webster, "We still live. To live not merely physically, like a worm, not merely to exist, but to live, in mind and spirit, in earnest, for an object, for a purpose, were ennobling.—Three million, or thirty hundred thousand human beings are near us, weighed down by the chains of slavery. Lend a hand towards breaking those chains. A million of men around us are on their way to the drunkard's grave. Will you help to save them? Gaunt Poverty crawls along the streets—will you give it relief? A feeble cry comes up from the sick room for help, help from the strong arms of Disease. How will you answer that cry? A human heart breasting the billows of Life leans towards you for sympathy. That sympathy may enable it to go up and conquer.

"This is Life, and all below it is the creeping of a clod; Life forever broadening, deepening, 'till 'tis perfected in God."

The new year will thus be a happy New Year. Its anticipations will be pleasing—the consciousness of duty done, soul-satisfying.

"Rejoice, Oh, young man, in thy youth!" said the wise man. We repeat it—"rejoice." Go not moping through these fields of usefulness,—strike in where you are: and if there be in your year a potion of sorrow, there will also be a potion of joy. There may be a "time to weep," but there will also be a time to laugh and dance and sing."

A Happy New Year be yours—A Happy New Year!

Municipal Elections.

Next Monday and Tuesday, 6th and 7th, are the days of Election of Town Councillors in the different Wards. Messrs. Thos. A. Ireland, and Dr. Cross, are two of the candidates of Eberts' Ward, who are in the field. -[See advertisements.]

The above gentlemen—being men of untiring zeal and integrity, possessing, as they do, unsurpassable abilities in their official capacities, and devoted to the prosperity and general interests of the Town, and its inhabitants generally—should be regarded as choice candidates for such important positions. Placing the most implicit confidence in them, we trust that every voting citizen will be out and give them their votes, and exert their influence in support of such worthy Representatives.

☞ Our readers will also please notice the address of Mr. D. R. Vanallen, as a worthy Candidate for the Municipal honors in Crysler's Ward.—Let every man be early at the Polls and doing—"United we stand divided we fall."

☞ We return our thanks to the Ladies and Gentlemen of Chatham, for their labors and contributions in endeavoring to make the Bazaar for the Freeman a profitable one: also those who were disconnected with the Committee of Arrangement, for their contributions. On behalf of the Committee, we would thank the Gentlemen of the Council for ordering to be returned six dollars of the funds for the use of the Town Hall.

☞ We call attention to the advertisement of Mr. J. Beckwith, who offers at Lottery, a valuable House and Lot, valued at $1400, and other prizes in Cash, to be drawn at the Chatham Arms, on the 19th of this month. Tickets to be had at Mr. Alfred Moore's, Book Store, in this town.

Dr. D. Lewis, the Homœopathist.

Dr. Diocletian Lewis, of New York, Homœopathist and Hydropathist, will deliver the first of a Course of Lectures on the subject of Human Health, in the Town Hall, Chatham, on Monday evening, 7th January, 1856. All are cordially invited to be present. Lecture to begin at Seven o'clock. Admission free.

The Doctor has also taken Rooms at the Chatham Arms' Hotel, where he may be consulted for all forms of Chronic or long standing Disease, until Monday, the 14th instant, each day, from 9, a.m., to 5, p.m.

☞ No charge for consultation without Prescription.

The following notice of this gentleman is copied from the Toronto Daily Leader:—

Dr. Lewis, the Homœopathist.

Dr. Lewis has now been in this city two w[eeks] delivering public lectures on Homœo[pathy] a kindred subjects, and prescribing for crowds of invalid[s]. We have heard many of his lectures, and enj[oyed] much intercourse with him in private; and though we refrained from any expression of opinion during the delivery of his lectures, we take pleasure in saying a word or two now that he is leaving the city.

Dr. Lewis is no adventurer, or quack. He previously followed the Allopathic system. His lectures are marked by a scientific accuracy and by a spirit of courtesy and dignity which it is refreshing to see in one who is necessarily a medical controversialist, there is no denunciation of others, no boasting of himself. Indeed his public lectures are invaluable. It would be well if every man and woman in Canada could listen to a course of instruction upon the means of preserving health from this excellent Homœopathic physician.

Among the many unscrupulous pretenders who have visited us from the neighboring States, it has been a matter of grateful surprise to not a few, to find as a visitor such a man as Dr. Lewis. The instruction he gives is calculated to be a great public benefit, and he ought to be welcomed by all good men wherever he goes. From many of his patients we hear expressions of gratitude; nor one of his purposes, in visiting these provinces, is to treat, Homœopathically and Hydropathically, chronic or long-standing diseases. It is to be hoped that he may visit Toronto again. Dr. Lewis is Editor of the Homœopathist, Censor of the Western College of Homœopathic Medicine, and member of the American Institute of Homœopathy. Altogether he is well entitled to the confidence of the public generally, and to the polite attention of our brethren of the press wherever he may go.—Toronto Daily Leader.

The following articles of interest we copy, as found in the People's Record for the month of September. Colonizationists use every statement which they can bend to their purpose, to disparage the self-freed men and women of Canada, for the sake of bringing up their system of expatriation, and we are glad to be able to show up their tricks upon the unsuspecting. The articles are headed:

Colonization—Both Sides.

First, the inducements held out and the promises made by colonization before going:

From the Colonization Herald of 1853.

A Company for Liberia.—Several intelligent colored men with their families, citizens of this State, are now forming themselves into a company, intending to emigrate to the Republic of Liberia this fall—and desire to sail from this port, or from New York. * * * Rev. S. Williams and Charles Deputie, are the leading agents in this new organization and movement. They are both practical men—men of intelligence and devoted piety. They have large and highly respected families, and are pleasantly situated, with the possession of comfortable property, and many friends. So far as these things go, they and their families could live in this country as eligibly as any colored people—but they have long desired a home for themselves and children, where they could enjoy the highest developments of social freedom and civil liberty. They have been to the only spot on earth, where the colored man constitutionally possesses, and really enjoys, in the largest capacity, an Independent Republican Nationality. They have tasted in that glorious land the sweets of liberty—they saw the workings of freedom—they delighted in the relations of social and civil equality. The goodly land of promise, like the heritage of God, for his long and deeply oppressed people, opened sublimely before them—the prospects of great usefulness deeply impressed them—the redemption of Africa from ages of darkness and degredation, and the salvation of their race from long and cruel oppression, overwhelmed them with convictions of duty to God, themselves, and their exile brethren. They have returned to this land fully resolved to obey the voice of Providence and return with their families to the African Republic as soon as possible—taking all their colored brethren with them, who deem themselves worthy of enfranchisement and the enjoyment of so great an honor, as to be free citizens of a free Republican government in Liberia. Their prospect is encouraging, and we earnestly hope the Company will be thoroughly organized, go out, and establish themselves permanently and efficiently in that interesting country.

Deputie, is from the iron region of this State, and has a practical education as a mechanic, and to some extent as a machinist, having been several years in that business."

Second, the actual facts and the arguments after going.

From the Christian Recorder, 1855.

The African Colony at Liberia.—Mr. Editor,—We have heard various conjectures respecting the African Colony at Liberia, and the scheme of colonizing the free blacks of America; but never before have we been so thoroughly convinced of its utter futileness, as we have by the letters of Wm. Nesbit and Mrs. Deputie of Hollidaysburg, Pa. The letters referred to were published in the Democratic Standard of Hollidaysburg, March 7th, 1855. These letters exhibit the fact, that the colored people of America are not prepared for direct colonization.

This Wm. Nesbit and Mrs. Deputie, with others, formed a company, under the patronage of the Colonization Society, for the purpose of establishing the lumber business in Africa. For this the company purchased a steam engine in Philadelphia, with the intention of erecting a saw-mill when they arrived there. Mr. Nesbit after reaching Africa and finding things not as represented by Samuel Williams, one of the company, and the Colonization Society, sought to return to the United States; but before he was permitted to leave, he, as his letter states, had to resort to gross deception in order to obtain a passport. Thus we learn, that the Colonization Society uses deception in this country, to get the colored people to Africa; and after they arrive there force them to stay.

Now, sir, what we wish to say is, that the colonization of colored people in any country under the patronage of the American Colonization Society, never can succeed in bettering the condition of the African race, for this reason—the whole scheme is not natural it is the bastard spawn of prejudice.

How comes it to pass, that men who will not grant you a peaceable passage through this country in which we live, in search of honorable employment, nor afford the least protection out of it, but will bind limb and mind, can come suddenly around, acknowledge your nationality in Africa, and form treaties of reciprocity—when the very same nation will not acknowledge the independence of the black government of Hayti? It is not so; it is a perfect farce. The colored people of America have no confidence in the profession of such men. * * *

The American Colonization Society can never succeed. The subjects they plant in a distant soil are stunted before they leave this country, and then they are put on an uncongenial soil. There is no place so unsuitable to the growth of man, as where the mind does not take hold on the soil. How can the roots extend, or the branches spread, if a people be dwarfed and stunted by being forced against their will? It never can be done, try it who may; it is not natural.

"If this be the truth," says proud America, "what are we to do with the negroes?" I say educate them. Admit them to all the rights of citizens in this country. Do not cramp their limbs, nor dwarf their minds. Teach them the value of civil government; of wealth, arts, commerce, &c., and they will solve the vexed problem of the destiny of the colored race, both here and in Africa.

Correspondence.

Dear Reader:

We regret the necessity that compels us to take up the pen in self-defence; a task that we have always endeavored to shun, as unworthy of the life that we try, perhaps in vain, to lead. But justice not only to ourselves, but also to the cause we advocate, to our friends and to the world, demands it now.

We think a man has no more right to wrong himself than his neighbor, and to avoid such a wrong we perform this painful duty. To those who have heard our views—to our many friends—this may be welcome, for it has been often asked as a defence, which it was rather our place than theirs to make; to others it may be tedious, but perhaps none the less serviceable in correcting an error, now becoming wide-spread. That error, though originating in a very questionable source, has found, at length, its way into more respectable company, owing, no doubt, to the temper of the times.

Three or four of the papers of the Niagara and Welland Districts—only one of which heard us—accused us of advocating "Free Love," &c. They made a great deal of capital out of it at the time, writing heavy leaders, sometimes to the length of two columns, in virulent abuse of ourselves, rather than of the principles which they accuse us of promulgating. And to establish their credit as guardians of the public morals, (save the mark!) they proceed to call us such names as their vocabularies supply—such as we prefer never to repeat, even though to apply to the worst of men. Be assured, we shall not insult you by mentioning them here. But it is quite as much to be regretted, even for their own sakes, that they stated as they did, what hundreds of their own readers knew to be utterly untrue.—Owing to the fact that their readers knew the falsehood, we took little pains to contradict them at the time: nor would we now, but that their remarks have since been quoted by a few of the more respectable journals of the country—quoted with that morbid avidity for astonishing things—no matter how untrue, so characteristic of a large portion of the country press. It pained us to see such remarks, in the company of those we had been accustomed to respect; but it pained us all the more, as showing the tendency of human nature to circulate and credit, at first, the vicious and false, rather than the good and true; the slanderous and condemnatory, rather than the approval. For more than two years we have received, as we are fully prepared to show, the encomiums of the most respectable journals of the Province. Few have ever quoted them, save personal friends. Of this we will not further complain, for we know, that in the end, the calm majesty of Right will prevail, though it requires, at times, a long patience to await it.

Let us here make confession and explanation. We do not advocate "Free Love," nor did we ever, though we do advocate a more pure, free, and rational system of divorce than the laws of either Canada or the U. States yet sanction. In this respect our creed is, that every man should be the chaste husband of one wife; she also chaste; that they should live in love and respect for each other; but where they fail of this, and are wretched and miserable, raising, if a family at all, one of criminals and tyrants, to feed the gallows and penitentiaries, or at best, of sour and discontented creatures, (as badly mated parents always do,) unfaithful to each other, and untrue to their God, we think they might better be apart. As to "Free Love" and its advocates, we never favored either. Indeed, we have a horror of them all, if they are what the press represents them to be, and that is all we know of them; but from the manner in which we have ourselves been misrepresented by a portion of the press, we are learning to place very little reliance on what it may state of any man or of any opinion.

One of our calumniators asserts that we came from a place he calls "Modern Times," (We never heard of it before,) and he straightway proceeds to give a description of it and its institutions and its people, so full and precise as to startle one to the question, "How do you know?" He attempts, with the help of a marvellous imagination, to account for our instruction and the course we came, (from the States to be sure,) adding that we shall meet with no favour in this Province, but shall be treated throughout British America as he has treated us. Could he be ignorant of the fact that in every city of Canada except Quebec, which we have not yet visited, and in most of the towns, we have been favored with an unprecedented success. Thanks to the more liberal and respectable portion of the Press, that success was partially recorded; we have the record. Poor man, we were sorry for him, for he was not long from the States himself. He knew little of the country, little of the journals, and so was less wary than those with whom he banded. In his very long, wise, labored articles, he made himself so ridiculous as to fall beneath the notice even of those whose hands he sought to lick. He never heard the lectures, nor our opinions on the subject on which he so much froths and foams. May he settle the account of his many falsehoods with his own conscience. Perhaps it may be even harder than to have settled it with us. He was at the first lecture. We made a rather unfortunate, though we must say, an unintentional allusion to his little paper, intending no particular disrespect. He came no more, but in his next issue, said "we made base attacks upon the Press of Canada." (His little paper, the Press of Canada?") To this day, he has never heard us say a word on the subject that he would fain have the world believe, stirred the wrath of the little Achilles, to protect society from ruin, by teaching the "worthy member of the Bible Society, and a teacher of youth, and a third party who holds a prominent position in society, &c.;" by teaching these we say, better than to "form a committee for assisting in the lecture arrangements" because, he says, so modestly, "in our opinion, they did it from a vulgar curiosity." According then to the little Editor's opinion, all educated and worthy members of society—men superior to himself—who go to hear and decide [illegible] from a vulgar curiosity! Pity [illegible] have betrayed him into [illegible] for there is, after all, much in the man that is worth.

The Welland Herald—a paper that we have been accustomed to respect, and one that we see quoted in this matter more extensively than all the rest—showed a strange alacrity to spread the vile report. He never heard us, or at least we were never in his neighborhood. Why hasten to be so malignant on authority so slight; and we believe it was the only one, as that of the St. Catharines Constitutional—known in literary society, as the "Smut Machine"—so questionable in its moral tone. Of this machine, we are reluctantly compelled at last to speak, and to do so plainly, after having [illegible] comparitive silence, for nearly two years, its unchristain abuse, and billingsgate slang. In dealing with him, we are compelled to appear harsh; but we shall certainly be just. A creature of notoriously immoral life, "whose breath rains contagion," who, it was said, was like a "street vagabond, turned out drunk from the bar-room the night of the day on which he first learned his name, one who makes boast of having, by his obscene strictures, silenced a noble minister of the Gospel in his own town, from performing a Christian duty; such a one, surely, is not the man to whom society is to be indebted as a moral teacher.

We sincerely regret the necessity that compels us to make public, the account of our transactions with that bad man. It may prove instructive; so here it is:

In January of '54, we refused him our advertising work, preferring a rival, who did it better and cheaper. In the next issue of the Constitutional, appeared a virulent article, to the effect that we ought to be tarred and feathered, and a great many other unpleasant things of the kind. He found but little plausible reason for his onslaught, so he accused us of a want of patriotism because we spoke of the enormous amount of tobacco used in this and the old country, and the pauperism that it might alleviate. The charge was so ridiculous that we paid it no attention; but simply to hint to a few friends of the cause. From that day to this, he has omitted no opportunity of continuing his abuse in public and in private. We receive occasionally, a paper, bearing every mark as coming from that office, covered with printer's ink, thick and heavy. What a gentlemanly way of extorting "black mail." We will not insult the Press of Canada by asking, if they sanction it, though we blush to confess it, we have in a few other cases, suffered from refusing this same black mail. He attended none of the Lectures but the last, and that with the express purpose of condemning, mistating, misquoting, and misrepresenting, every thing we said. That he has succeeded remarkably in so doing will be testified by the audience of two hundred, (it was much larger,) which he admits were there. If the Lectures were of such a questionable moral tendency, why has it not been before discovered? They have been heard by tens of thousands of the best people of Canada, and have been by them very generally commended: also by the Press of all parties. We have letters of commendation and poems by writers well known to the Canadian public, in approval of our course, and cards of acknowledgment by ministers of the Gospel. One before us, signed by four in one town—four of the most orthodox persuasions. If necessary, these could be made public, though it would be an egotism which we prefer not to indulge. We have also on hand, and would quote, if room would permit, favorable notices from the following journals, and as a copy of this will be sent to each, they may contradict or explain it if they wish. We send it, that there may be a fair and honest understanding with all. Some approved but slightly, others emphatically. We give them as they stand on the book, without reference to date, premising that we have lost a few that we valued much. These are what remain—Hamilton Banner, May 4th, 14th, '53; Port Hope Watchman, Feb. 9th, '53; Hamilton Gazette, May 4th, '55; Ingersoll Chronicle, Nov. 16th and 23d, '55. Bowmansville Messenger, Sept. 11th, '53; Kingston Whig, Oct. 15th and 16th, '53, and Nov. 29th, '54; Brockville Monitor, Aug. 30th, '54, and Aug. 29th, '55; Belleville Intelligencer, Nov. 16th, '53; Globe, Dec. 26th, '53, and Aug. 27th, '55; Oshawa Freeman many times. [We would here remark, that the opinions of the Freeman and the Bowmansville Messenger, are those of which we are most proud, because with the [illegible] and many of the readers of those journals, we have been acquainted since boyhood. We acknowledge and cherish their friendship as honest and worthy men, who would not carelessly commend any man if he were not also worthy of public confidence.] Brantford Herald, April 22nd, '55; Woodstock Sentinel, May 4th, '54; Woodstock Gazetteer, May 6th, '54; London, Times, May 19th, '54; London Prototype, May 27th, '54; Prescott Telegraph, Sept. 6th, '54 Ottawa Citizen, Oct. 6th, '54; Montreal Gazette, Oct. 27th, '54, Herald same date; Pa[illegible] 27th, '54; Port Maple Leaf A[illegible]3, 55; Galt Reporter, April 20th, '55; [illegible] Countryman, Sept. 15th, '55.

We may so[illegible] with specimens from some of them. A recent one and to the point, from the Li[illegible] Chronicle, "a paper," to quote a cotemporary, "whose truth and taste we should alike respect," says: * * "The hall was nightly crowded, and we believe many who attended these Lectures, came away wiser and better men. Mr. O'Leary was requested to give another course of Lectures, but his engagements were such as to preclude the possibility of doing so at the present. The assertion of a St. Catharines journal, that Mr. O'Leary promulgated the 'Free Love' doctrine, is without foundation. Nothing could be farther from the intention as the hundreds who heard the 'matrimonial' lecture on Wednesday night, can testify." We believe the editor had previously heard us on this same subject, and hence ought to be able to judge.

Surely, all this is sufficient to repel the charge of Immorality, Free Love, &c.; sufficient to wipe from our garments the "smut" that that "machine" would have cast upon them. We are not the only ones that have suffered by him. For proof, see his [illegible] and one attacks of last winter [illegible] man whose name he would profane [illegible] taking it on his [illegible] lips—lips accustomed only to scurrility. See also his abuse of Physiological Lecturers for [illegible] private Lectures [illegible] sion, of course, to merely [illegible] fancy. They cannot admonish the world of its errors, but his imagination pours forth its horrid pictures, accusing worthy men of a guilt that gives its offensive odor to his every page. NOTHING LIKE LEATHER.
IF YOU WOULD BE RICH,
Read this, and save your Penny.

GOOD morrow, friend—I'm a stranger in your town, can you inform me where I can get a pair of good boots made?"

"Yes, sir, I can; just go to T. W. WILSON'S, King St. East, Chatham, next to Smith's Grocery; that's the place; he'll accommodate you most satisfactorily."

"Well, how is your judgment in regard to the quality of boots and shoes?"

"Most excellent—I'm an old boot and shoe maker; many are the days that I've drawn the cords."

"Where did you say I could find him?"

"Why, the next door to Mr. Andrew Smith's Grocery, corner of King and William Streets, East,—any person can tell you."

"Will you conduct me there?"

"I will with pleasure; for I know him to be, from experience, one of the best manufacturers of BOOTS AND SHOES in town. His stock is of his own manufacture, and he has always on hand a superior quality for gentlemen's wear. He's also very particular in getting up his work; so I'm confident he can't fail to give reasonable satisfaction to those who favor him with their patronage."

"There are some boot makers whose work is beautiful to the eye, but plaguy pinching to the feet; and I have lumps upon each instep which in foul weather give me excruciating pain."

"Ah, yes, too much have I suffered by letters from the boot moulders hands; but he's not one of them; he endeavours to make a systematic fit, measuring from joint to heel, and from lump to toe—closely observing the most minute protuberance, if there be any upon the feet; and he seldom fails to make his boots set as easy thereon as a glove upon a lady's tender finger. Besides, he always keeps a superior stock on hand; perhaps you might obtain a pair upon the instant, that would fit your feet and please the eye."

"Then I must try him."

"Try him, of course, and you'll save at each end of your bargain. First—you'll buy cheaper—secondly, your boots will wear you longer."

"Come, let's go."

"I'm ready—Are you a cash man?"

"I am; for he who pays cash slips the discount or credit, and secures it in his own pocket."

"Then that's the place, for his motto reads"—

Ask of me no trust, when you come to buy;
Ask of me no trust, for you I must deny;
Ask of me no trust, it hath destroyed many;
Ask of me no trust, I cannot grant you any;
Ask of me no trust, but with your cash rally;
Ask of me no trust, nor with my pocket dally.

FORGERY.

The Counterfeit Radway's Ready Relief in Canada.

THE LIVES OF THE PEOPLE IN DANGER.

THE public are cautioned against purchasing a counterfeit of Radway's Ready Relief, which is now circulating through the Canadas.—We are informed that parties at Hamilton, C.W. have been selling a spurious article of our Ready Relief, for the genuine to dealers. This is not only a fraud upon us, but is a most wicked imposition on the public. The wretch that will knowingly lend himself to so vile and treacherous a trick, for the gain of a few extra sixpences, is unsafe to deal with, and should be shunned by all respectable dealers, for if a few sixpences will induce him to rob the distressed sufferer of hope and health and to place the invalid's life in danger, he would not scruple to deceive his best customers.

Dealers who wish the genuine, purchase only of established credit, not of irresponsible pedlars or travelling adventurers and impostors.

Dealers who have R. R. R. offered to them below our regular price, may rely upon the same being a counterfeit preparation. We never sell R. R. R in large quantities for less than 10 per cent from our regular gross price. Dealers who purchase the counterfeit and offer the same for sale, render themselves liable to prosecution.

All of our travellers and authorized Agents have a power of Attorney signed by us, authorizing them in our name, to transact our business.

The following are our only Agents in Hamilton, C. W. T. BICKLE & SON; HAMILTON, KNEESHAW & CO., In Toronto, LYMAN BROTHERS. & CO., are our general agents—we also sell to SIMPSON & CO.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1856,

THE

SATURDAY EVENING POST.

ESTABLISHED AUGUST 4TH, 1821.

Weekly Edition between 80,000 and 90,000

IN issuing their Prospectus for 1856, the proprietors of the POST take it for granted, that the public are already tolerably well acquainted with the character of a paper that has grown strong during the storms and sunshine of THIRTY-FOUR YEARS. Their object always has been as it remains to be, to publish a weekly paper for the family circle, which shall not only amuse, but also instruct and improve, those who may read it. To accomplish this object, the best articles are selected or condensed from foreign and domestic periodicals, and original articles of an instructive character, procured when possible.

Letters from Foreign Lands; the most interesting portions of the Weekly News of the World; Sketches of Life, Adventure and Character; Selected and Original Articles upon Agriculture; Account of the Province and Stock Markets; and a Bank Note List are included among the solid information to be constantly found in the POST.

But the mind requires a wider range—it has faculties which delight in the humorous and lively the imaginative and poetical. These faculties also must have their appropriate food, else they become enfeebled, and, as a consequence, the intellect becomes narrow and one-sided, and is not able to take an enlarged and generous view of human nature and its destiny. To satisfy these Heaven-implanted cravings of our mental being, we devote a fair proportion of the POST to FICTION, POETRY, and HUMOR.

Among our contributors in the first two of the above departments, are several of the most gifted writers in the land. We also draw freely for Fiction and Poetry upon the best periodicals in this country and Great Britain. We design commencing a New Story by MRS. SOUTHWORTH, author of "The Deserted Wife," "Miriam," &c. in our first paper for January next.

Engravings—Illustrative of important places and actions, of Agricultural and other new Inventions, with others of a Humorous, though refined character, are also freely given.

The Postage on the Post to any part of the United States, paid quarterly or yearly in advance, at the office where it is received, is only 26 cents a year.

Terms.—The Terms of the Post are Two Dollars, if paid in advance; Three Dollars, if not paid in advance. For Five Dollars, in advance, one copy is sent three years. We continue the following low terms for Clubs, to be sent, in the city, to one address, and, in the country, to one Post Office.

4 Copies,	- - - - per annum	$ 5
8 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$10
13 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$15
20 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$20

Persons residing in British North America must remit twenty-five cents in addition to the subscription price, as we have to prepay the United States postage.

ADDITIONS TO CLUBS.—Any person having sent the money and names for a Club, may add new names to it at the same rate, provided the latter will allow their subscriptions to end at the same time those of the main list do. We will willingly supply the back numbers, if we have them. Our object is to have all the subscriptions in each Club end at the same time, and thus prevent confusion.

The money for Clubs must always be sent in advance. When the sum is large, a draft should be procured if possible—the cost of which may be deducted from the amount.

Post-Masters or others sending for Clubs, would confer a favor by having them sent to one address, when they can do so conveniently.

The papers to Clubs are invariably stopped at the expiration of the period for which they have subscribed.

A NEW ARRANGEMENT.—Our subscribers will take notice that we now have no collecting agents out of this State. They will therefore please remit to us direct.

All persons addressing letters to us should be careful to give the name of the State, as well as of the town, in which they live. All letters must be post-paid.

Subscribers wishing their paper changed, will please give the name of the Post-Office to be changed from, as well as the Post-Office they wish it hereafter sent to.

We trust that such of our old friends, the Post-Masters, as do not feel inclined to take advantage of our liberal offers themselves, will show our Prospectus to other influential and responsible persons who will be willing to raise Clubs, &c.

No. 66, South Third Street, Philadelphia.

A MORE "IMPORTANT NOTICE!"

American Tract Society—Slavery.

THE Independent of New York, in an article in that paper, of the 15th March, being one of a continuation of articles regarding the "American Tract Society," has this sentence:—"For thirty years, one of the greatest institutions of Evangelical Christendom, has been testifying in effect, that the institution of Slavery, the buying and selling of human beings and the profession of the slave-trader, are less offensive to God, less contrary to the Gospel, less perilous to the souls of men, than the practice of dancing. It has attempted to exhibit and authenticate, on the widest scale, an administration of Christianity, in which there shall be no more syllable of rebuke for crimes that shock the morals sense of Christendom. The influence of the Tract Society has tended to make the Southern churches more timid and cowed in the presence of the imperious slave-trading interest. As a consequence of this policy—partly, but not exclusively—behold the SOUTHERN APOSTACY!"

In December 1841, a report of "The" Committee of the Synod of New York and New Jersey, on the subject of the mutilations of books by the American Tract Society," was published; and in that report, the mutilations and omissions in the editions published, by that Society, of D'Aubigne's History of the Great Reformation, were pointed out—besides, there are the omissions and expurgations in other books published, as to the vile sin of Slavery, and the substitution of sentences other than the original.

The notice by me entitled, "Publications," referable to these matters, has been widely circulated, and a Canadian public are again reminded of their duty.

JOHN J. E. LINTON.

Stratford, C. W., March 20, 1855. 8

Exhibitions and Lectures.

THE Undersigned proposes exhibiting the

Diorama of Uncle Tom's Cabin,

in the principal Cities Towns, and Villages in the Northern States and Canada: and to accompany them with abundant evidence as to the truthfulness of the facts assumed by the author, in the work known by that name, which will include the recital of some most mysterious and thrilling incidents in the history of his own family. The flight of his parents for freedom—their capture, and return to slavery and their second flight; a history of their lost boys, who were stolen and sold into slavery—the death of one of them, and the redemption of the other by the purchase of himself; and the final purchase for the enormous sum of five thousand dollars.

The paintings, comprising the scenes of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," are the production of an eminent French artist, and show as large as life, and represent the most prominent scenes and characters in the work.

In order to render our labors more effectual and create more general interest and benefit, we propose the following arrangements, viz.—To give one half of the receipts to any Church or Society, or regularly appointed committee by the public, who will provide a place, secure an audience, and defray the expenses incident to the meeting.

An arrangement by which every Church or Society in the country may replenish their funds, aid their pastors, or whatever other benevolent object that commends itself to public patronage.

Let such then who would help the cause, help themselves, and help us in our feeble endeavours to enlist the public ear to the cries of bleeding humanity; go at once to work, communicate immediately with us preparatory to an exhibition.

We shall not however confine ourselves to that deplorable and humiliating aspect of the colored man's case, repesented in that work.

But we promise at no distant date, a new programme of very different scenes, representing not only an entirely original, but a far more hopeful aspect of the black man, than has ever been presented to the American public.

It is neither egotism, nor yet flattery, in us to say that this mode of giving instruction possesses the double merit of engaging those two most important faculties that man possesses—the mind and the sight at the same time, and making an ineffaceable impression. It is not as being necessarily dependent and degraded, then that, we shall confine our exhibitions of his character.

There have been places where, and times when the black man of modern times has proven himself the patriot, the statesman, and the warrior. As such, then, let him be known to the world, that it may acknowledge it, and to our youth, that they may imitate their example and copy their virtues.

We suffer more perhaps, from false representation, than all other ills put together.

Those amongst us who have acted the part of patriot are represented to be vicious and ungovernable, and those whom the most direful and crushing prejudices have debarred from the opportunities for higher development are represented as submissive willing underlings. Generation after generation are stamped with the same false impressions, and learn to assume it on the one hand, and regard it as a fixed inevitable fact on the other.

We are arranging a new and a very extensive programme of Distinguished Colored Men and the incidents with which they have been connected and acquitted themselves honorably—such as ATTICUS, "the first martyr of the Revolution," the "Colored Regiments at the Battle of New Orleans," and the distinguished and most prominent "black leaders" who freed the first spot discovered by Columbus, that was first desecrated to slavery—Hispanola—now Hayti.

I have endeavored to make the arrangements sufficiently liberal to meet the patronage and engage the attention of all who have an interest in our common cause.

For further important particulars, you will write me, (post paid.)

OR

UNIVERSAL HISTORY:

IN WHICH THE HISTORY OF EVERY NATION, ANCIENT AND MODERN, IS SEPARATELY GIVEN.

Illustrated by 70 Stylographic Maps and 700 Engravings

By S. G. GOODRICH,

AUTHOR OF 'PICTORIAL GEOGRAPHY OF THE WORLD,' 'PARLEY'S CABINET LIBRARY,' 'PARLEY'S TALES, &c.

Complete in one imperial octavo volume, of more than twelve hundred pages of double column letter press; and upwards of seven hundred elegant illustrations.

It is believed that a Universal History, suitable in form, extent, and arrangement, to the wants of the mass of American readers, has never been presented to the public. For this reason, and in compliance with numerous suggestions from those entitled to respect, the author has undertaken the formidable task of supplying one of a popular character and for general use.

A reader of history should always have in mind two things—viz., the place where, and the time when, an event happened. In the present work therefore, the geography of each country whose history is carefully given; and to aid the reader seventy stylographic maps have been added. Careful attention, also, has been paid to Chronology, so that at every page and every chapter, the reader may find the dates of the events which are described.

In order to avoid the confusion which inevitably arises from embracing the whole history of mankind in a general chronological view, the author has adopted an ethnographic arrangement, by which he presents each nation separately. The advantages of this plan for a popular treatise, are obvious. The mind of the reader is not overtasked by a boundless extent of view, nor bewildered by a perplexing multiplicity of objects. On the contrary, everything is clear and distinct. Events, instead of being forced out of their true place and connection, are presented in easy and natural succession, thus imparting to the work the attraction and interest of continuous narrative. Another advantage of the plan is, that it not merely admits, but invites descriptive details, illustrative anecdotes, personal adventures and sketches of character, all of which serve not only to give life and effect to the pages of the historian, but to impart the colors of truth and reality to the pictures he may present.

While the work thus presents a separate and distinct history, and also exhibits the present state of every nation, ancient and modern, including the recent revolutions in Europe, still, for the purpose of showing how nations have acted upon or influenced the destinies of one another, General Views are given, at suitable periods, presenting the great movement of mankind, as one family, in its onward march from the past to the present time.

It is proper to state, that while the author promises only a compilation, yet he has endeavored to choose from the highest and best authorities; and while the work is offered as a popular treatise, it still seeks to present the practical results of philosophic investigation; and finally, that while justice is rendered to the classic ages, the whole work is written in the spirit of modern

Poetry.

For the Provincial Freeman.

TO MISS M. C*.

Lady, to me, thou art dearer far,
Than mortal ere should be;
Thou art the pure, bright evening star,
That guides me o'er life's sea.

Oh! when it sets in yon bright clime,
Ne'er more to rise again;
Oh! then my weary heart will pine,
That I alone remain!

Oh! when the mild and gentle light
In thy soft beaming eye
Grows dim in death's deep cheerless night,
For thee I'll ever sigh!

Thou hast within my bosom found
A friendship, pure and true;
Without a mark, without a bound,
It falls like evening dew.

Then let me linger near thy side,
'Till every hope and fear
Shall vanish beneath oblivion's tide,
While yet thy form is near.

Oh! thou art gladness to the soul—
A sun-beam to the heart;
Forgive, if I thy name unrol,
Where all may gaze apart!

Lady! I dare not tell thee all;
No, never may I reveal—
The silent love that beneath the pall
Of sadness I conceal!

For oh! within my bosom burns
True friendship's holy flame;
And wheresoe'er my footsteps turn,
I'll breathe thy much loved name!

I could not, Lady, love thee less,
Though loving brings to me
A blighted heart, a wilderness
Of fond hopes lost in thee.

I never loved a being fair,
Without some deep regret;
No cheerless gloom, no deep despair,
Can teach me to forget.

WALDEN.

Chatham, Jan. 7, 1856.

I LOVE THE LADIES—EVERY ONE.

I love the ladies, every one—
The laughing ripe brunette,
Those dark-eyed daughters of the sun,
With tresses black as jet.
What raptures in their glances glow!
Rich tints their cheeks disclose,
And in the little dimples there
Young smiling Loves repose.

I love the ladies, every one—
The blonde so soft and fair,
With looks so mild and languishing,
And bright and golden hair.
How lovely are their sylph-like forms,
Their alabaster hue,
And their blushes far more beautiful
Than rose-buds bathed in dew.

I love the ladies, every one—
E'en those whose graceless forms
Are ragged as the oak that's borne
A hundred winters' storms.
The young, the old, the stout, the thin,
The short as well as tall,
Widows and wives, matrons and maids,
Oh! yes, I love them all.

I love the ladies, every one—
None but a wretch would flout 'em;
This world would be a lonely place
If we were left without 'em.
But lighted by a woman's smile,
Away all gloom is driven,
And the most humble hope appears,
Almost a little heaven.

I love the ladies, every one—
They're angels all, God bless 'em!
And what can greater pleasure give
Than to comfort and caress 'em?
I call myself a temperance man,
So 'll drink their health in water—
Here's to the mothers, one and all,
And every mother's daughter!

Humor and Wit.

Horace Greeley a White Man.

A Washington correspondent gives the following description and amusing anecdote of Horace Greeley:

"No man in Washington attracts more attention. He cuts a quaint figure everywhere with his shambling lop-sided gait, loosely cut clothing, cravat awry, and hat perched back on the top of his head, leaving his great white face standing out like the figure head of a Dutch lugger. Greeley has great influence here, and he knows it.

"Let me tell you a little joke I heard last evening while at the National Hotel. A trio of Irish servants were busily talking politics in the corner of the reading room (Irish servants are great politicians here), when one of them suddenly exclaimed:

"'Be jabers, boys, an' there's ould Greeley!

"'Where? exclaimed his companions, with as much interest in their looks as would naturally exhibit on being told Patrick or Bishop Hughes was [illegible]

"'Standin' yon by the tall gintleman.'

"The Hibernians gazed intensely at Horace for [illegible]

d by the guard. Those who were able to ut up their bed covering and manufacture lothes and socks to ward off the bleak winds f the mountain, did it, expecting no additions to their bedding,—and accepting the tern alternative of sleeping on the cold floor f their dungeon. Others who were not so rotected by clothing, were conveyed to the ospital, or slept "the sleep that knows no waking."

In December, 1813, the old English agent was removed, and his place supplied by the appointment of Captain SHORTLAND, who, Mr. HEADLEY says, relieved, as far as he could, the terrible sufferings of the men impressed.

We will now pass on to the mention of the so-called Massacre, in 1815. Mr. HEADLEY's account of it—and in substance, in fact, every American account, reads thus:

"On the fourth of April, Captain Shortland having gone to Plymouth, they were not allowed any bread. Bearing the privation patiently, for forty-six hours, they resolved to break open the store-house and supply themselves. So at dark as the officers entered the yard and cried out 'Turn in! turn in!' a signal previously agreed on was given, and in an instant the excited thousands moved in one dark mass towards the gates. One after another gave way before the tremendous pressure, and these maddened hungry men rushed around the depot of provisions, their shouts and cries ringing over the alarm bells and beat of drums, that summoned the garrison to arms. The alarm spread to the neighboring villages, and the militia began to pour in. In a few moments the soldiers advanced with charged bayonets towards the multitude, when they were sternly ordered off by the prisoners, who swore that if they dared fire or charge, they would charge in turn, and level that store-house to the ground, and march out of prison. The officers, fearing the result of such a contest, prudently agreed to give them their usual supply if they Americans, for their native land. They were impressed as Americans. As Americans they were registered; as Americans they bled and died.

The first man killed was JOHN HAYWOOD, "the sailor in his prime," a black man. The inquest was held over his body. As CRISPUS ATTUCKS, a mulatto, fell first at Boston, in 1770, so JOHN HAYWOOD, a black man, fell first at Dartmoor, in 1815.

THOMAS JACKSON, "the boy of fifteen," another black, fell next. He died early on the morning of the 7th, of a gun-shot wound of the abdomen.

Among the others wounded were:

"WILLIAM PENN, (a black,) gun-shot wound of the thigh."

"ROBERT WILLET, (tawney,) amputated thigh."

"JOHN ROBERTS, (black,) gun-shot wound of the thigh."

"JOHN WILLET, (black,) fractured jar-lacerated hip, complicated with a shattered state of the upper jaw."

This "Return" of killed and wounded, is signed by THOMAS GEORGE SHORTLAND, Agent, and GEORGE MAGRATH, Surgeon, and is therefore authentic. It has its place, as such, in the American State Papers. It will remain there, a continual witness of suffering undergone for "our own, our native land."

This was not, at the time, regarded as a matter of no account, by the two Governments concerned.

ANTHONY ST. JOHN BAKER, His Brittannic Majesty's Chargé de Affaires, in a letter to the U. S. Secretary of State, Hon. JAMES MONROE, said:—

——"As an additional proof of the sentiments which animated the Prince Regent, on this painful occasion, his lordship was also further commanded to express to Messrs. Clay and Gallatin, his Royal Highness's desire to make a compensation to the widows and families of the sufferers," &c.

In answer, Mr. Secretary MONROE wrote:

"DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
WASHINGTON, Dec. 11th, 1815.

"SIR:—

"I have the honor to receive your letter of the 3rd of August, communicating a proposition of you Government to make provision for the widows and families of the sufferers in the much-to-be-lamented occurrence at Dartmoor.

"It is painful to touch on this unfortunate event from the deep distress it has caused to the whole American people. This repugnance is increased by the consideration that our Governments, though penetrated with regret, do not agree in sentiment respecting the parties engaged in it.

"While the President declines accepting the proposition contemplated by His Royal Highness the Prince Regent, he nevertheless does full justice to the motives which dictated it.

"I have the honor to be, &c.,
"JAMES MONROE.

"ANTHONY ST. JOHN BAKER, Esq.,
"His Britannic Majesty's Chargé de Affaires"

Another link is thus completed in the chain of evidence that colored Americans in 1776 and 1812, were Americans indeed. Another protest against the wrongs they and their descendants have borne. Another plea for Rights of which they have been deprived on American soil.

Will Americans of to-day heed these protests and these pleas? We shall see.

Origin of Slavery.

Mr. Bancroft, in the first volume of his history of the United States, gives an account of the early traffic of the Europeans in slaves. In the middle ages, the Venitians purchased white men, Christians, and others, and sold them to the Saracens in Sicily and Spain. In England the Anglo Saxon nobility sold their servants as slaves to foreigners. The Portuguese first imported negro slaves from Western Africa into Europe in 1442. Spain soon engaged in the traffic, and negro slaves abounded in some places of that kingdom. After America was discovered, the Indians of Hispaniola were imported into Spain, and made slaves. The Spaniards visited the coast of North America, and kidnapped thousands of the Indians, whom they transported into slavery in Europe and the West Indies. Columbus, himself, enslaved 500 native Americans, and sent them into Spain, that they might be publicly sold at Seville. The practice of selling North American Indians into foreign bondage, continued for nearly two centuries. Negro slavery was first introduced into America by Spanish slaveholders who emigrated with their negroes. A royal edict of Spain authorized negro slavery in America in 1503. King Ferdinand himself sent from Seville fifty slaves to labor in the mines. In 1511 the direct traffic in slaves between Africa and Hispaniola was enjoined by a royal ordinance. Las Casas, who saw the Indians vanish away before the cruelties of the Spaniards, suggested that the negroes, who alone could endure severe toils, might be further employed. This was in 1518. The mistaken benevolence of Las Casas extended the slave trade which had been commenced.

Sir John Hawkins was the first Englishman that engaged in the slave trade. In 1652 he transported a large cargo of Africans to Hispaniola. In 1657 another expedition was prepared, and Queen Elizabeth protected and shared in the traffic. Hawkins, in one of his expeditions, set fire to an African city, and out of 3000 inhabitants, succeeded in seizing 260. James Smith, of Boston, and Thomas Keyeser, first brought upon the colonies the guilt of participating in the slave trade. In 1654 they imported a cargo of negroes. Throughout Massachusetts the cry of justice was raised against them as malefactors and murderers; the guilty men were committed for the offence, and the representatives of the people ordered the negroes to be restored to their native country at the public expense. [illegible] twenty negroes for sale. This was the epoch of the introduction of Slavery in Virginia. For many years, the Dutch were principally concerned in the slave trade in the market of Virginia.

From Parsons' "Inside View of Slavery"

A White Woman for Sale.

Mr. C., a dry goods merchant of Boston, was with me at the little city of M., where he went to visit a partner in trade. He had not been in a slave State before, and was bitterly opposed to emancipation. Two merchants—slaveholders—had been in our company on the way to that city. Whenever slavery was talked of, Mr. C. uniformly concurred with them. The next morning after we arrived, we saw a handbill in the bar-room, in which forty-four females were advertised for sale. Stepping out into the street, we found those gals sitting on the sidewalks. At the further end of the row was a very beautiful girl, apparently perfectly white and neatly dressed. The moment Mr. C. discovered her, he exclaimed, "What do you think that white girl is sitting there with those negroes for?"

"I presume she is a slave, sir," said I.

"That can't be!" replied Mr. C., "just look at her! Why, I never saw a prettier girl in my life."

Now, Mr. C. had heard that likely quadroons are held as slaves and sold in the market; but he had never believed that a young lady, so entirely American, so elegant in form and feature, so intellectual in appearance, with pure blue eyes, and the perfect red and white Caucasian complexion was in the same degraded condition as the African girl. And his fine sensibilities were greatly shocked at the idea that a white girl, so beautiful, was doomed to such disgrace. His heart was steeled against sympathy for blacks, but it was unshielded on the side towards the white race, to which his mother, wife and daughter belonged. Hence he was unprepared to believe it, when I said to him, "She is a slave, sir!"

There was the precise number, including her, advertised in the bill. Still incredulous, Mr. C. stepped up to the drover and asked, "Is that white girl a slave, sir?"

"That's not a white girl: she is a nigger, sir," replied the drover.

Mr. C. bit his lips with suppressed indignation, paused, and then ejaculated, "Is it possible?"

"Does she belong to you?" said he to the drover.

"Yes, sir," replied the drover.

"What do you ask for her?" inquired Mr. C.

"I was offered eighteen hundred dollars for her, last night. I want two thousand for her."

"What do you ask for that one?" said Mr. C. pointing to a light quadroon sitting next to the white girl.

"I will take fifteen hundred for her."

"Well, how much for the black ones here at this end of the row?"

"I will take eight hundred apiece," replied the slave-dealer.

"Why, can that white girl"—

"That isn't a white girl; that's a nigger, sir, I tell you," interrupted the drover, contemptuously. At the same time he removed a woolen cap from her head, which exposed the light brown hair, and added, "you see her hair is waved."

This is regarded as evidence that African blood is mingled with the white. Mr. C had now become excited, and he exclaimed—"Well then, can that white nigger do more work than one of your black niggers, that you ask so much more for her?"

"Oh, no," replied the drover, and, perceiving that Mr. C. did not comprehend the superior value of female beauty to physical ability in a slave, he added—"but you know she is a high-priced fancy girl."

"By heavens!" vociferated Mr. C., "'tis too bad!" and turning to me, with his clenched hands raised towards the heavens, he added, "I will never say another word against the Abolitionists so long as God lets me live!"

Abolition of Slavery in Egypt.

A letter from Alexandria, of the 5th, states that the Egyptian government has lately put into execution the decision come to by the divan, relative to the abolition of slavery. Not only is it not allowed any longer to buy or sell slaves in Egypt, but all those in the possession of private individuals were informed that they were free. All of them immediately left, and the first result has been that paid servants are becoming very exacting as regards wages. The precipitation with which this measure has been carried into effect will, it is feared, cause much suffering to those whom it is professed to benefit, as from being thrown entirely on their resources, they will have to suffer severe privations, before they find the means of maintaining themselves.—Galignani's Messenger.

A Poor Man's Wish.

I asked a student what three things he most wished. He said, "Give me books, health and quiet, and I care for nothing more." I asked the miser, and he cried, "Money—money—money." I asked a pauper, and he faintly said, "Bread—bread—bread!" I asked the multitude around me, and they lifted up a confused cry, in which I heard the words "Wealth, fame and pleasure." I asked a poor man, who had [illegible] an experienced Christian, and he said that I wish is health, Interesting Discoveries in Central America.

The Abbe Bourboug, a French priest, writes that in an exploration into the interior of Guatemala, his eyes were charmed with the remains of antique cities of great magnitude and solidity, thus confirming the views of Stephens; but he has also been enabled to discover, in a literary form, some precious monuments of the language and history of the aboriginal people long anterior to the arrival of the Spaniards. In the old Indian languages and dialects, of which he has made himself a proficient, he traces many words of Teutonic, Danish, Swedish, English, and even Oriental origin; and the histories which he has found, coupled with Indian tradition, go to show that the tribes who once peopled that part of the Continent, and who, it is evident, had made further advances in the arts of civilization than any of the living tribes of aborigines, may possibly have been the descendants of the old Northmen, who are vaguely reported by tradition to have reached America centuries before Columbus beheld our shores.

Exercise in the Open Air.

From Hartstone's expedition to the polar sea, we extract the following:—"Nature has qualified man to breathe an atmosphere 120 degs. above zero, or 60 below it, a difference of 180 degrees, without injury to health; and the doctrine of physicians that great and sudden changes of temperature are injurious to health is disproved by recorded facts. There are very few Arctic navigators who die in the Arctic zone; it is the most healthy climate on the globe to those who breathe the open air. We have among our associate observers one who observes and records the changes of temperature in Australia, where the temperature rose to 115 at 3 o'lock, P. M., and next morning at 5 was down to 40 degrees—a change of 75 degrees in fourteen hours; there the people are healthy—and another at Franconia, (N. H.) where the changes are the most sudden, the most frequent, and of the greatest extent of any place with which I am in correspondence on the American Continent; and yet there is no town of its size that has so great a proportion of its inhabitants who pass the age of three-score and ten. It is the quality of the changed air that constitutes the difference that physicians notice, and not the temperature."

Cheap and Excellent Candles.

The following recipe I have tried twice, and find it all that it is cracked up to be. I have no doubt that it would have been worth more than $20 to me if I had known it twenty years ago. Most farmers have a surplus of stale fat and dirty grease, which can be made into good candles at a trifling expense.

I kept both tallow and lard candles through the last summer, the lard candles standing the heat the best and burning quite as well, and giving as good a light as the tallow ones.

Directions for making good candles from lard:

For 12 pounds of lard, take 1 pound of saltpetre, and 1 pound of alum; mix them and pulverize them; dissolve the saltpetre and alum in a gill of boiling water; pour the compound into the lard before it is quite all melted; stir the whole until it boils, skim off what rises; let it simmer until the water is boiled out, or till it ceases to throw off steam; pour off the lard as soon as it is done, and clean the boiler while it is hot. If the candles are to be run you may commence immediately; if to be dipped, let the lard cool first to a cake, and then treat it as you would tallow.—Cor. N. E. Farmer.

Sauer Kraut.

The heads of white winter cabbages, after removing the outer leaves, are to be cut into fine shreds, and spread out upon a cloth in the shade. A cask which has had vinegar in it is to be selected, or if that cannot be had, the inside should be rubbed over with vinegar or sauer kraut liquor. A layer of salt is to be put in the bottom of the cask, carraway seeds are to be mixed with the shreds of cabbage, and they are to be packed in the cask to the depth of four or six inches; and layers of this kind, with salt between each layer are added, till the cask is full, stamping them down with a wooden stamper as they are put in, to half of the original bulk. Some mix salt with pepper and salad oil. Salt should be put on the top, and the outside leaves of the cabbage. About two pounds of salt suffice for twenty-five heads of cabbage. The head of the barrel is to be loaded with heavy stones. A common method is for a man, with clean wooden shoes on, to tread the cabbage down in the cask. Fomentation will take place, and some juice will be given out, which is muddy and fetted, this rises to the surface and is to be replaced with fresh brine. When fomentation is over, the casks are closed up. The French preserve many other vegetables in a similar manner.—Translated from the French, for the Western Agriculturist.

"A Minister for Sale."

There is an Advertisement in a Kentucky paper of one for sale. He was a slave to a man recently deceased. It is stated in the advertisement that he holds a License to Preach.. Churches in want of a Pastor will take notice.—Anti Slavery Reporter—London, Eng.—1st August, 1855. It is to be supposed that such a "chattel" as the above will afford "a good spec," in Kentucky and other places in the Slave States,—and is published in Canada as one fact, however, glaring, pitiful and degrading. The authority is indisputable, for the Reporter is published "under the sanction of the British and Foreign Anti Slavery Society." London, England,—our "Free and happy land." No publication of the A. Tract Society or of the A. S. S. Union, giving information to explain the matter of the slave question, or to awaken feelings as to the subject of slavery, is published by either; and that in their own land where American Slavery perpetrates such a sale! That such a fact as this sale has a counterpart, is furnished in the Reporter of 1st September, 1855,—for there is undoubted proof, by the Rev B. F. Sedgewick, a Presiding Elder in Western Virginia, who states (and he says too, in 'italics.' "I speak of that which I do know, deny it who dare!") "that slavery has for years and does at this moment exist in the Ministry of the Methodist E. Church. A presiding elder, during the late session of the Western Virginia Conference, told me there were three of its members (Ministers) who were slaveholders!" The Rev. D. R. McAnnally also states (as in Reporter) "slavery is not a bar to communion in the M. E. Church North, any more than in the Church South. Here in Missouri, Arkansas, Kentucky and Virginia, a slaveholder is admitted into the Church North as freely as any one else"—and further on, it is stated on the authority of the Rev. J. G. D. Pettijohn, "a highly esteemed member (minister) of the North Indiana Conference," who says, alluding to those who believe that since the division of the M. E. Church into south and north, they are now entirely free from all connection with slavery and slaveholders, "I will introduce them to a person who is in good standing in our church, who, a few months since, sold a slave to a southern slavetrader—the most despicable character on earth—and when this slave was delivered to his new master, they had to tie him hand and foot, and throw him on a dray and send him in this way to the steamboat that was to convey him south to the New Orleans slave market. And in the same city where the above instance occurred, there was for many days in that slave pen or prison, a slave left there for sale to the highest bidder, whoever he might be, either a St. Clair or Legree, all the same; after a few days, this slave was purchased by one by one of his old neighbours, who was not willing to see him sold to the southern slavedriver; and this slave that was thus sold was not only the property of a Methodist, but also of a Methodist Preacher! I stood by on one occasion, and saw a member of our church, and a class-leader at that, purchase a slave girl, the last and only child that a slave mother had left. I stood and looked upon that poor mother, as she kneeled before this man; I heard her say, as she sobbed bitterly. "O, massa, please spare my child! O please spare my [illegible] comforts!" and then [illegible] to pray. It seemed [illegible] to move a heart of [illegible] but all was in vain. Finally [illegible] bought her to sell again, and thus tore her child away, where, in all human probability, they would never meet again in this world. And I might continue and enumerate many more similar cases that I could vouch for their truth, but the above is sufficient." And to do away with quibbling and cavilling, which abounds so much with objectors in Canada, as to the A. Tract Society and A. S. S. Union, and U. Canada Tract Society, &c., these statements will be found also in the Auburn Christian Advocate, New York, with remarks, &c. The Wesleyan Methodist Church of Canada fraternises with and recognizes the M. E. Church north,—sells and circulates its publications, and dimits Ministers to its care. But other Canadian churches are also culpable. The Wesleyan body are not the only Siloamites! Again, the fact is, (whoever disputes it let them examine the correspondence of the Independent, of New York, and other papers) that a colporteur or agent of the American Tract Society, or of the American S. S. Union, can travel safely unmolested through the Slave States of Virginia, Kentucky, and Missouri, and distribute his books, &c., as such are acknowledged as of pro-slavery origin, but the licensed and regularity ordained Minister of the Cross of Christ, if he travels, must be mute and silent, as to the "peculiar institution" of slavery, &c., and if he is not altogether so, and even however cautious, also his very dress will excite that which will make a free man ashamed of his kind. So much for the "sum of all villainies" (Wesley,)—and "man's inhumanity to man,"—(Burns)—"Nothing of tragedy can be written, can be spoken, can be conceived, that equals the frightful reality of scenes daily and hourly acting in the United States, beneath the shadow of American Law and the shadow of the Cross of Christ"—(H. B. Stowe.)

Stratford, C. W., Nov. 27, 1855.

The Sandusky (Ohio) Register, of 3rd inst., says, "Eight 'chattels' passed through this city Thursday evening, on the U. G. R. R., en route for Canada. They 'passed over Jordan' safely. Fatal Accident at the Lyceum Theatre Toronto.

On Thursday evening, during the performance of the after piece at the Lyceum Theatre, some alarm was created amongst the audience by screams issuing from behind the scenes, and Mr. Nickinson, the Manager, soon after rushed upon the stage, calling loudly for medical assistance. Dr. Cadwell promptly attended to his appeal, and it was then known that the clothes of Miss Rosalie A. Cook, an interesting child of 12 years of age, had caught fire. It seems that the unfortunate girl, dressed in the light gauzy apparel suitable for the piece in which she was about to take part, in one of the side stage entrances, unconsciously allowed her dress to take fire at a stove which was in the passage, and in spite of the efforts of three of the actors, who were close at hand, (one of whom was considerably burned in his efforts) she sustained such injuries, that death was the result in a few hours after. An inquest was held upon the body in one of the anterooms of the Theatre yesterday, and evidence of the foregoing facts being adduced, the jury returned a verdict of "Accidental Death," accompanied by a recommendation that the Manager should provide wire guards for the stoves adjoining the stage, the light drapery of the actresses rendering such care necessary.

Municipal Elections.

On Monday and Tuesday last, the election for Municipal Councillors came off in the several wards in this town, and we were pleased to see that the rate-payers, as we anticipated, entered into the contest with an unusual degree of spirit. Editorial Changes.

Our numerous readers will learn, with regret, the resignation by Rev. W. P. Newman, of his position as Editor of the Freeman, because of many and pressing duties in other directions. Mr. Newman has been fearless and out-spoken, active and energetic, as a writer for the paper, when not troubled with severe indisposition, to which a highly susceptible organization subjects him, and we trust that though so decided to vacate the Editorial "stool," he will be frequently found among our contributors, as he promises to be. It will also be observed that Mr. Wm. H. Day, so well known among colored Americans, has expressed a determination to favour our columns with occasional articles, over his own signature, as Corresponding Editor. We are exceedingly gratified at this, as the withdrawal of Mr. Newman, by the terms of our contract, imposes upon the former Editor, and present Publishing Agent, the task of furnishing Editorial matter, until such times as the other parties interested shall select Mr. Day, or some other suitable person to fill the post, or until some other arrangement is effected. Meantime, we must beg the indulgence of our readers. A short experience in the "chair" has satisfied us of the difficulties attending the Editor. Every one must be pleased; but little allowance is made for the frailty of those assuming so responsible a post, consequently public indignation is hurled against the offender with unequalled fury. We have only to say, that it shall be our aim to please our readers, whenever we can do so, without sacrifi[illegible] the true interest[illegible] comp[illegible]

W. H. DAY, Esq.

Our highly esteemed, learned, and talented friend, W. H. Day, Esq., is now settled in Canada permanently, and we believe that he is disposed to take hold on behalf of the Provincial Freeman, and do what he may be able, to sustain it. We hope, therefore the owners of the Freeman will secure, if possible, his services as its Editor. Our sense of propriety and love for the cause would induce us, if there were no other reasons, to yield our position, as Editor to a man of Mr. Day's abilities, notwithstanding the desires of the owners of the Freeman, and its patrons generally, so far as we know, to have us continue at our post. We have more to do than we can well do, and therefore shall rejoice to have brother Day take our Chair in the Freeman's Office. Let an effort be made immediately to secure him, and, in the meantime, we shall do what we can for the same purpose. If we can secure brother Day's services, we shall do what we may be able to do, and as long as we shall see cause to, for the Freeman, over our own signature, if acceptable to the parties concerned. We will meet faithfully any present liability, or obligation that may be upon us, in our connection with the Freeman, if God will help us, even though such a change should be made. Indisposition will not allow us to say more on the subject now.

A Word to Young Men.

As we have frequently been written to for information respecting lands in this section of the country, we take pleasure in stating to the interrogators, and for the benefit of all desirous of engaging in the agricultural business, that lands can be obtained on as reasonable terms as could be wished. There is at this time at the Bond End some twenty-five hundred acres, of fine timbered land, with as good soil as there is in the Province, to be let to parties wishing to settle on it. It will be divided into hundred acre lots, to suit settlers. So at least 25 fine farms are to be had for ten years, and at the low price of four dollars per year, which just pays the taxes. The owners of the land are prepared to let it to individuals wishing to settle.

We think this should be an inducement to young men, who are limited in circumstances, and have an idea of farming. There certainly can be no loss, if the one who takes hold, does it with the determination of making a living. We might say, it would be impossible to starve on this land, where the bushes are cracking in every direction, from the numerous quantities of Deer bounding to and fro, and the tree limbs shaking with Coons and Squirrels, and wild Turkeys, in droves, to be seen daily,—to say nothing of the innumerable amount of Fish that are to be had, bordering, as the land does, on Lake Erie, where a fortune is to be accumulated, had one the means of getting a seine, which would enable him to stock the Chatham and other markets with fish, of excellent qualities; likewise, the privilege of cutting and selling the wood on the land by the cord.

Young men, where are you? If in Canada, come to the work; if in the States, come also. Here are opportunities afforded you, such as you seldom get, and where you can become the yeomen of the land, which will be creditable to you and your followers. Come out of your dining-halls, let the people wait on themselves at meal times,—leave the carriage boxes, the horse stables, and the boot-black shops! Come to the land of Liberty, where you can enjoy your God-given rights, as men, and walk erect. For further particulars enquire of Mr. F. H. Lawrence, Rond Eau, who is Agent of said [illegible]

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the Provincial Freeman:

Mr. Editor:—Being in this place for some days past, I have been induced to speak through your paper of the improvement, and advancement in all kinds of business made here. Within the past six months, there have been several new buildings erected, and quite a number more are in contemplation, for the spring. I have also been informed, that there is an extensive corn trade carried on by Messrs. Charity, Webster and others. I also notice an extensive white pine Lumber Yard, kept by J. B. Hollensworth, late of Philadelphia, who appears to be doing quite a trade in that line. The new store of Mr. J. H. Charity, contains an assortment of all kinds of goods, and is well patronized by persons wishing to purchase for cash or to trade. Corn is worth six shillings per bushel. Mr. Wm. H. Wilson, appears to be doing considerable in the Grocery and Shoemaking business, and I might speak favorably of many others, if time would allow. By invitation, I attended a Temperance Meeting, held last week in the A. M. E. Church, about one mile from this place; there was quite a large attendance of both sexes. A Committee on a Constitution and By-laws, appointed at a previous meeting, reported; the Constitution was taken up, and would have been adopted by sections, had it not been for several gentlemen who I have been informed are ever ready to find fault; but after considerable alterations, they were adopted. It has been very lively in this place, so far, this winter. I noticed numerous sleighs and waggons in our streets, at one time. We have also had a pretty extensive emigration to this place, within the last four months, many of whom are possessed of excellent literary attainments. Since the commencement of the Holidays, we have had several beautiful parties, and entertainments, and the young folks have done ample justice to the egg-nog," confectionary, &c., so abundant. In my opinion the day is not far distant when this will be quite a point of attraction for literary characters and business men.

Observer.

Dresden, Jan. 1, 1855.

* It is evident from "Observer's" letter, that Dresden is "going up," but, according to his own showing, the sooner that the Temperance Society can be got fairly under way the better.—(Ed. Freeman.)

Arrival of the 'Ericsson.'

New York, Jan. 15.

The steamship Ericsson arrived here this evening, having left Havre on the 30th December. She brings 27 passengers, and Paris papers to the 19th, which are later than those received by the Atlantic.

The Galignani's Messenger says, in spite of the efforts made for the re-establishment of peace, the Prussian Government is preparing additional forces for a new campaign. The Minister of war is said to have given orders for a corps of 10,000 men to be got ready without delay.

Cronstadt, Dec. 17.

The Crimean submarine telegraph is broken. The storm continued. Four merchant vessels has been wrecked at the mouth of the Danube.

Several English gun-boats were still cruising in the Sea of Azoff, destroying the Russian fisheries.

Gen. Williams and the prisoners of Kars have been sent to Tiflis.

Col. Schawartaeenberg had succeeded in reaching Erzaroum.

The Russians found at Kars 3,000 wounded, and 250 cannon.

The retrogade movement of Omar Pacha on Redoubt Kale is confirmed.

There has been a quarrel at Kertch, between the Anglo Ottoman troops and the Turks, but it was put down.

In the Paris Bourse, a sudden rally had taken place, on a report that a truce for three months had been agreed upon.

Arrival of the 'America.'

Halifax, Jan. 16.

The America arrived at this port at 7 o'clock this evening.

Nothing new of an official character regarding the peace negotiations; but in well informed quarters it is said they will not terminate in a satisfactory manner.

Count Nesselrode has addressed a Circular to the representatives of Russia at the chief foreign courts, stating that Russia accepts the third point relative to the neutrality of the Black Sea, in the following sense:

That Turkey's right to close the Straits be maintained; that no ships-of-war be admitted in the Black Sea except those of Russia and Turkey: the number of ships to be so maintained to be mutually agreed to by Russia and Turkey, and to be settled by direct and special treaty, by these two special powers, without the intervention of other nations. This interpretation the allies consider inadmissable.

In Sweden the accounts are very warlike The military manufactories work incessantly, and reports are that Sweden will openly take the field in the spring. Sweden has some millions of surplus revenue which is to be divided between the army and navy.

The Government is reported to have [illegible] establishment and depots of [illegible] fleet at Keil, and the fleets [illegible] in April.

NOTHING LIKE LEATHER.
IF YOU WOULD BE RICH,
Read this, and save your Penny.

GOOD morrow, friend—I'm a stranger in your borough, can you inform me where I can get a pair of good boots made?"

"Yes, sir, I can; just go to T. W. WILSON'S, King St. East, Chatham, next to Smith's Grocery; that's the place; he'll accommodate you most satisfactorily."

"Well, how is your judgment in regard to the quality of boots and shoes?"

"Most excellent—I'm an old boot and shoe maker; many are the days that I've drawn the cords."

"Where did you say I could find him?"

"Why, the next door to Mr. Andrew Smith's Grocery, corner of King and William Streets, East,—any person can tell you."

"Will you conduct me there?"

"I will with pleasure; for I know him to be, from experience, one of the best manufacturers of BOOTS AND SHOES in town. His stock is of his own manufacture, and he has always on hand a superior quality for gentlemen's wear. He's also very particular in getting up his work; so I'm confident he can't fail to give reasonable satisfaction to those who favor him with their patronage."

"There are some boot makers whose work is beautiful to the eye, but plaguy pinching to the feet; and I have lumps upon each instep, which in foul weather give me excruciating pain."

"Ah, yes, too much have I suffered by fetters from the boot moulders hands; but he's not one of them; he endeavours to make a systematic fit, measuring from joint to heel, and from lump to toe—closely observing the most minute protuberance, if there be any upon the feet; and he seldom fails to make his boots set as easy thereon as a glove upon a lady's tender finger. Besides, he always keeps a superior stock on hand; perhaps you might obtain a pair upon the instant, that would fit your feet and please the eye."

"Then I must try him."

"Try him, of course, and you'll save at each end of your bargain. First—you'll buy cheaper—secondly, your boots will wear you longer."

"Come, let's go."

"I'm ready—Are you a cash man?"

"I am; for he who pays cash clips the discount of credit, and secures it in his own pocket."

"Then that's the place, for his motto reads"—

Ask of me no trust, when you come to buy;
Ask of me no trust, for you I must deny;
Ask of me no trust, it hath destroyed many;
Ask of me no trust, I cannot grant you any;
Ask of me no trust, but with your cash rally;
Ask of me no trust, nor with my pocket dally.

T. W. WILSON.

Arrival of the Canada.

Halifax, 4 P. M. to-day

The Royal Mail Steamship Canada arrived here this afternoon, after a very stormy passage

She brings Liverpool dates three days later than the Arago at New York.

The Canada will probably arrive at Boston early on Thursday morning.

Her news is principally confirmatory of previous advices, with the usual compliment of Peace Rumors, and speculations on the result of the Prince Lieven's mission to St. Petersburgh.

A defensive treaty between Sweden and the Western Powers had been certainly ratified.

There was no general or political news of importance.

Further by the Canada.

LIVERPOOL BREADSTUFF MARKET.—Messrs. Brown, Shipley and Co., report flour dull at the following quotations:

Western Canal Flour 42s, choice do 44s, Philadelphia and Baltimore 42s a 44s 6d, Canadian 40s, Southern 41s. Wheat 2d lower with but little speculative demand—White at 11s 9d, red 10s 9d. Corn had declined 6d, and was dull on account of large arrivals in England from the Black Sea—white 50s, yellow 44s 6d, mixed 44s a 44s 4d

THE LIVERPOOL PROVISION MARKET.—Richardson, Spence, & Co. report pork at former rates prime western at 85s. Beef in improved demand; prime mess at 120s. Lard more active at 69s. Bacon in better demand at 58s for western.

The steamer Washington arrived at Cowes on the 21st, and put back to Southampton on account of ice after landing her mail and passengers.

The steamship Canada left Liverpool at 10 a. m. on Saturday 22nd, and arrived at Halifax at 12 30 p.m. Jan. 8.

The present prospect of peace is this:

It may be remembered that Austria made a suggestion on certain terms, not known to the public, which the Austrian Cabinet considered might constitute a basis for negotiations. These negotiations Austria sent to Paris through the French minister at Vienna, and the French Government sent a copy of said suggestions to London. Much correspondence ensued between London and Paris, resulting in the original suggestions being sent back, altered by France and England, to Vienna.

The Austrian cabinet expressed mortification that her suggestions were not adopted. More correspondence ensued resulting in Austria's agreeing to append her name jointly with France and England to the modified proposals.

The proposition thus amended was sent from Vienna on 25th ult., Count Esterhazy being the messenger to St. Petersburgh. Five or six days are allowed to reach St. Petersburgh, and 21 days more are allowed for the Czar's unconditional acceptance or refusal of it.

The contents of this Memorandum are kept profoundly secret. Only the Czar's refusal, France and England threaten to continue the war and Austria to sever diplomatic relations, and afterwards to be governed by the course of events

Simultaneously with the transmission of peace proposals to Russia, the Paris Moniteur publishes the treaty entered into between the Allies and Sweden, guaranteeing the western limits of Sweden against Russian aggression.

As Russia does not at present threaten Sweden, this ill-timed treaty may be received by Russian as an intentional insult, and cause the rejection of the peace proposals.

The terms of the treaty are very stringent.

It is declared that the treaty is concluded to prevent any complication to trouble balance of power in Europe.

By Art. 1st, the King of Sweden engages himself not to cede to Russia, or exchange with her, nor allow her to occupy any portion of the territory belonging to the crowns of Sweden and Norway, and moreover not to cede to Russia any right of pasturage, fishing ground, or any other right whatever, on the said territory, or of the coasts of Sweden and Norway, to reject every proposition Russia might have to establish the existence of the above named rights.

Art. 2d. In case Russia should make any proposition to the King of Sweden, or any demand with the view to obtain either the cession or exchange of any portion whatever, of the territory belonging to the crowns of Norway and Sweden, by the permission to cede certain points of said territory or the concession of privileges, rights, or of any other on those said territories, or on the coasts of Sweden or Norway- The King of Sweden engages to communicate immediately such propositions to the Emperor of France and Queen of England and they engage to provide Sweden with sufficient military and naval force for Sweden to resist the claims or aggressions of Russia; the nature and the importance of the forces in question shall, the case occurring, be decided by a common agreement between the three powers.

A secret clause is appended to the treaty, providing for Sweden eventually taking the field against Russia.

Austria.

VIENNA.—Private correspondence intimates that the Austrian Goverment declined the Invitation made by Prussia to join her in a pacific intervention; also that Napoleon refused the invitation of Prussia, conveyed by Baron Prokotch to open negotiations; but that in the middle of Nov. Count Buol, in the name of Austria, invited the Western Powers to re-open at Paris the Peace Conference of Vienna, recommending also that the guarantees should be maintained, but the third point on the guarantee respecting the Russian domination in the Black Sea. Russia has not replied to the proposals; but will send representatives to the Conference. Hence has arisen the rumor that the Austrian and French proposal is merely to define the meaning of the third point; and that if an understanding be come to, the Vienna conference, so called, will be re-opened in the middle of January.

It is stated that the Swedish Ambassador at Vienna has formally announced to the Austrian Government that Sweden adheres to the Allies interpretation of the Four Points.

It is also said that the Count Stackleberd had brought to Vienna a Russian proposal for peace, in terms different from those proposed by the Allies. This is doubtful.

The English Government, it is said, has demanded all explanations from the court at Vienna, as to the intention of the Austrian army found in selling no fewer than 70,000 horses,

The present position of affairs is thus exposed:

France is less pacific, and England less warlike than they seem.

The London Daily News says that a majority of the French cabinet think Russia will accept the terms proposed. A majority of the English ministry think not.

From the Principalities, rumors say the convention for the settlement of the peace are indefinitely adjourned.

Count Cironin will assume the command of the Austrian army here.

The Crimea.

The Tchernia had overflown, doing considerable damage. Later despatches were received from Lord Codrington, saying the Russians continue to fire from the North side without much damage. Saving Banks are to be opened in the Russian army. Kars surrendered on the 28th. On Nov. 14th Gen. Mouraniff summoned the garrison to surrender.

Gen. Williams held a council of war on the 15th. After the council the garrison sent a flag of truce, asking ten days suspension of hostilities, and permission to send a courier to Erzeroum. Gen. Mouraniff allowed the English captain, Thomson, to go to Erzeroum. Thomson reached Erzeroum on the 15th, and returned on the 22d.

Gen. Williams had an interview with Mouraniff on the 24th. By this time the garrison had no food, except some horses for the sick in the hospitals.

No details of the surrender.

Private accounts, rather doubtful, say without date, that Omar Pacha had driven the Russians, and taken possession of Lioni, five leagues from Kertch, and was preparing to attack the latter city, which was garrisoned by 10,000 Russians.

Gen. Mouriniff had not detached part of the force to oppose Omar Pacha.

The Turks found 120,000 fur coats in Lioni.

Great Britain.

Attention is entirely occupied in discussing the probability of peace. It is remarkable that the general public speak more in favour of carrying on the war than at any previous period.

The Queen has sent a jeweled decoration to Miss Nightengale.

Samuel Roberts, the poet, is dead.

Heavy gales had prevailed during the week, and numerous casualties had occurred on the British coast.

The Counterfeit Radway's Ready Relief in Canada.

THE LIVES OF THE PEOPLE IN DANGER.

THE public are cautioned against purchasing a counterfeit of Radway's Ready Relief, which is now circulating through the Canadas.—We are informed that parties at Hamilton, C.W. have been selling a spurious article of our Ready Relief, for the genuine to dealers. This is not only a fraud upon us, but is a most wicked imposition on the public. The wretch that will knowingly lend himself to so vile and treacherous a trick, for the gain of a few extra sixpences, is unsafe to deal with, and should be shunned by all respectable dealers, for if a few sixpences will induce him to rob the distressed sufferer of hope and health and to place the invalid's life in danger, he would not scruple to deceive his best customers.

Dealers who wish the genuine, purchase only of established credit, not of irresponsible pedlars or travelling adventurers and impostors.

Dealers who have R. R. R. offered to them below our regular price, may rely upon the same being a counterfeit preparation. We never sell R. R. R. in large quantities for less than 10 per cent. from our regular gross price. Dealers who purchase the counterfeit and offer the same for sale, render themselves liable to prosecution.

All of our travellers and authorized Agents have a power of Attorney signed by us, authorizing them in our name to transact our business.

The following are our only Agents in Hamilton, C. W. T. BICKLE & SON; HAMILTON, KNEESHAW & CO., In Toronto, LYMAN BROTHERS, & CO., are our general agents—we also sell to SIMPSON & CO.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1856.

THE

SATURDAY EVENING POST.

ESTABLISHED AUGUST 4TH, 1821.
Weekly Edition between 80,000 and 90,000

IN issuing their Prospectus for 1856, the proprietors of the Post take it for granted, that the public are already tolerably well acquainted with the character of a paper that has grown strong during the storms and sunshine of THIRTY-FOUR YEARS. Their object always has been as it remains to be, to publish a weekly paper for the family circle, which shall not only amuse but also instruct and improve those who may read it. To accomplish this object the best articles are selected or condensed from foreign and domestic periodicals, and original articles of an instructive character, prepared when possible.

Letters from Foreign Lands the most interesting portions of the Weekly News of the World, Sketches of Life, Adventure and Character; Selected and Original Articles upon Agriculture; Account of the Produce and Stock Markets, and a Bank Note List are included among the contents of the Saturday Evening Post.

But the great aim has always been to make the fireside happy and pure, and to please the imagination and the heart. These matters also must have their appropriate place, else it will become enfeebled, and, as a consequence, the intellect becomes stunted, and unable to take an enlarged and generous view of human nature and destiny. To satisfy the Heaven-implanted craving of the soul we devote a large proportion of the Post to FICTION, POETRY and HUMOR.

Among our contributors in the first two of the above departments are several of the most gifted writers in the land. We also draw freely for Fiction and Poetry upon the best periodicals in this country and Great Britain. We design commencing a New Story by MRS. SOUTHWORTH, author of "The Deserted Wife," "Miriam," &c. in our first paper for January next.

Engravings—illustrative of important places and actions, of Agricultural and other new Inventions, with others of a Humorous, though refined character, are also freely given.

The Postage on the Post to any part of the United States, paid quarterly or yearly in advance, at the office where it is received, is only 26 cents a year.

Terms.—The Terms of the Post are Two Dollars, if paid in advance; Three Dollars, if not paid in advance. For Five Dollars, in advance, one copy is sent three years. We continue the following low terms for Clubs, to be sent, in the city, to one address, and, in the country, to one Post Office.

4 Copies,	- - - - per annum	$ 5
8 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$10
13 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$15
20 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$20

Persons residing in British North America must remit twenty-five cents in addition to the subscription price, as we have to prepay the United States postage.

ADDITIONS TO CLUBS.—Any person having sent the money and names for a Club, may add new names to it at the same rate, provided the latter will allow their subscriptions to end at the same time those of the main list do. We will willingly supply the back numbers, if we have them. Our object is to have all the subscriptions in each Club end at the same time, and thus prevent confusion.

The money for Clubs must always be sent in advance. When the sum is large, a draft should be procured if possible—the cost of which may be deducted from the amount.

Post-Masters or others sending for Clubs, would confer a favor by having them sent to one address, when they can do so conveniently.

The papers to Clubs are invariably stopped at the expiration of the period for which they have subscribed.

A NEW ARRANGEMENT.—Our subscribers will take notice that we now have no collecting agents out of this State. They will therefore please remit to us direct.

All persons addressing letters to us should be careful to give the name of the State, as well as of the town, in which they live. All letters must be post-paid.

Subscribers wishing their paper changed, will please give the name of the Post-Office to be changed from, as well as the Post-Office they wish it hereafter sent to.

We trust that such of our old friends, the Post-Masters, as do not feel inclined to take advantage of our liberal offers themselves, will show our Prospectus to other influential and responsible persons who will be willing to raise Clubs, &c.

A MORE "IMPORTANT NOTICE!"

American Tract Society—Slavery.

THE Independent, of New York, in an article in that paper, of the 15th March, being one of a continuation of articles regarding the "American Tract Society," has this sentence:—"For thirty years, one of the greatest institutions of Evangelical Christendom, has been testifying in effect, that the institution of Slavery, the buying and selling of human beings, and the profession of the slave trader, are less offensive to God, less contrary to the Gospel, less perilous to the souls of men, than the practice of dancing. It has attempted to exhibit and authenticate, on the widest scale, an administration of Christianity, in which there shall be no more syllable of rebuke for crimes that shock the morals sense of Christendom. The influence of the Tract Society has tended to make the Southern churches more timid and cowed in the presence of the imperious slave-trading interest. As a consequence of this policy—partly, but not exclusively—behold the SOUTHERN APOSTACY!"

In December 1814, a report of "The Committee of the Synod of New York and New Jersey, on the subject of the mutilations of books by the American Tract Society," was published; and in that report, the mutilations and omissions in the editions published, by that Society, of D'Aubigne's History of the Great Reformation, were pointed out—besides, there are the omissions and expurgations in other books published, as to the vile sin of Slavery, and the substitution of sentences other than the original.

The notice by me entitled, "Publications," referable to these matters, has been widely circulated, and a Canadian public are again reminded of their duty.

Exhibitions and Lectures.

THE [illegible] proposes exhibiting the Diorama of Uncle Tom's Cabin, in the principal Cities, Towns, and Villages in the [illegible] Canada and to a [illegible] per the [illegible] the [illegible] Western States, where [illegible] Exhibition [illegible] Saturdays.

Each Diorama is a [illegible] the most [illegible] the imagination could [illegible] also must have their appropriate [illegible] become enfeebled, and, as a consequence, the intellect becomes stunted, and unable to take an enlarged and generous view of human nature and destiny. To satisfy the Heaven-implanted craving of the soul we devote a large proportion of the Post to FICTION, POETRY and HUMOR.

Among our contributors in the first two of the above departments are several of the most gifted writers in the land. We also draw freely for Fiction and Poetry upon the best periodicals in this country and Great Britain. We design commencing a New Story by MRS. SOUTHWORTH, author of "The Deserted Wife," "Miriam," &c. in our first paper for January next.

Engravings—illustrative of important places and actions, of Agricultural and other new Inventions, with others of a Humorous, though refined character, are also freely given.

The Postage on the Post to any part of the United States, paid quarterly or yearly in advance, at the office where it is received, is only 26 cents a year.

Terms.—The Terms of the Post are Two Dollars, if paid in advance; Three Dollars, if not paid in advance. For Five Dollars, in advance, one copy is sent three years. We continue the following low terms for Clubs, to be sent, in the city, to one address, and, in the country, to one Post Office.

4 Copies,	- - - - per annum	$ 5
8 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$10
13 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$15
20 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$20

Persons residing in British North America must remit twenty-five cents in addition to the subscription price, as we have to prepay the United States postage.

ADDITIONS TO CLUBS.—Any person having sent the money and names for a Club, may add new names to it at the same rate, provided the latter will allow their subscriptions to end at the same time those of the main list do. We will willingly supply the back numbers, if we have them. Our object is to have all the subscriptions in each Club end at the same time, and thus prevent confusion.

The money for Clubs must always be sent in advance. When the sum is large, a draft should be procured if possible—the cost of which may be deducted from the amount.

Post-Masters or others sending for Clubs, would confer a favor by having them sent to one address, when they can do so conveniently.

The papers to Clubs are invariably stopped at the expiration of the period for which they have subscribed.

A NEW ARRANGEMENT.—Our subscribers will take notice that we now have no collecting agents out of this State. They will therefore please remit to us direct.

All persons addressing letters to us should be careful to give the name of the State, as well as of the town, in which they live. All letters must be post-paid.

Subscribers wishing their paper changed, will please give the name of the Post-Office to be changed from, as well as the Post-Office they wish it hereafter sent to.

We trust that such of our old friends, the Post-Masters, as do not feel inclined to take advantage of our liberal offers themselves, will show our Prospectus to other influential and responsible persons who will be willing to raise Clubs, &c.

DEACON & PETERSON,
No. 66, South Third Street, Philadelphia.

☞ N.B.—Any Person desirous of receiving a copy of the POST, as a sample, can be accommodated by notifying the Publishers by letter, (post-paid).

We shall not however confine ourselves to that deplorable and humiliating aspect of the colored man's case, represented in that work.

But we promise at no distant date, a new programme of very different scenes, representing not only an entirely original, but a far more hopeful aspect of the black man, than has ever been presented to the American public.

It is neither egotism, nor yet flattery, in us to say that this mode of giving instruction possesses the double merit of engaging those two most important faculties that man possesses—the mind and the sight at the same time, and making an ineffacable impression. It is not as being necessarily dependent and degraded, then that, we shall confine our exhibitions of his character.

There have been places where, and times when the black man of modern times has proven himself the patriot, the statesman, and the warrior. As such, then, let him be known to the world, that it may acknowledge it, and do our youth, that they may imitate their example and copy their virtues.

We suffer more perhaps, from false representation, than all other ills put together.

Those amongst us who have acted the part of patriot are represented to be vicious and ungovernable: and those whom the most direful and crushing prejudices have debarred from the opportunities for higher development are represented as submissive willing underlings. Generation after generation are stamped with the same false impressions, and learn to assume it on the one hand, and regard it as a fixed inevitable fact on the other.

We are arranging a new and a very extensive programme of Distinguished Colored Men and the incidents with which they have been connected and acquitted themselves honorably—such as ATTICUS, "the first martyr of the Revolution," the "Colored Regiments at the Battle of New Orleans," and the distinguished and most prominent "black leaders" who freed the first spot discovered by Columbus, that was first desecrated to slavery—Hispanola—now Hayti.

I have endeavored to make the arrangements sufficiently liberal to meet the patronage and engage the attention of all who have an interest in our common cause.

For further important particulars, you will write me, (post paid,)

Poetry.

THE VOICE OF A SOUL.

The subtle poison quivered in the glass,
Full of fantastic, devilish eyes. I said:
'My life is bitter, and the hours are long.
I would that I were dead.

"'Tis but to place the chalice to my lips
And drink. 'Tis but to draw a breath,
And I shall stalk through the untravelled gloom
And avenues of Death!"

I saw a City looming on the night,
A sinful city, with its colored firs;
Heard its mutterings, and its throbbing heart
Full of accurst desires.

I saw it from my window, and near by
There lay another city, where was furled
The wings of weary Life—a Place of Graves!—
So near is world to world!

I worked in the mad city, in its crime,
Breathed its foul, tainted atmosphere, for bread;
There I had buried all my lofty hopes,
And Love, forever dead!

O, dreadful city, looming on the night,
Hate, Lust and Falsehood, queen it in thy halls—
'Twas but a step between the sepulchres
And those accursed walls!

The mausoleums whitened in the moon;
The grassy graves rose up in emerald swells,
And when the wind passed over them it stirred
A sea of lily bells!

Trailed the long drapery of the willow trees,
Filled the lindens with a music tone;
And when it passed, the larkspurs turned their heads
The way the sound had gone!

"O, lovely City, sleeping in the night,
Open thy gates, I weary of a breath!"
How quiet 'twas above! I did not think
It might be Hell, beneath!

It might be Hell beneath, for say, who knows
The quietness is not the outer shell?
That there is not within the hearts of graves
A seething, restless Hell?

O, then what eyes the amber poison made!
Delicious draught to work a madman's will.
A Voice within grew troubled, and I cried:
"Voice of my Soul, be still!"

Voice of my Soul, be still—as if the soul
Were menial! It rose up with majesty,
It spake of schisms, creeds, and men, and gave
Some earnest truths to me.

It spake of Christ, the lowly and divine,
Of fears, and doubts, and bitter feuds that were—
The dark Gethsemane, the Mount, the Cross,
The stone-barred Sepulchre!

Then of the wonder of this pendulous sphere,
Its purple tides, dew-dappled morns and nights;
The fiery fingers clutching at the world—
The phantom Northern Lights!

It spake of One that doth pervade all things;
Whose gentleness is folded in the rose;
Whose heart is in the sunsets, and whose life
Within us ebbs and flows!

Said how He loved us, everything alike,
The word in air, the dew-drop's opal dyes;
That everything was "good," and even our woes
Were angels in disguise.

'And is it," said my soul, more tenderly,—
It saw my wealth of tears.—"And is it meet
That thou should'st scorn the life God gave thee,
And fling it at his feet?

Voice of my Soul, be still! I heed thy words:
I will not force the dark and mystic Gate.
Let Death come to me, gently when it will.
I fold my hands and wait!

GOD HELP THE POOR.—"Jack," said a pious coal-dealer, "what kind of a morning is it?" "Very cold, sir, very." "Is the canal froze?" "Yes, sir; hard." "Raise the coal a dollar a ton." God help the poor.

"They are exhibiting a bear-woman up in town," said Mrs. Sled, as she dropped like a kedge anchor into Mrs. Partington's big arm chair. Mrs. Partington looked painfully at Ike, who was pegging a top by the door, to the danger of sundry jars of preserved plums. "A bare woman, indeed!" said she. "I wonder what they will exhibit next? Though the bareness isn't the shame—'tis the knowing of it. There was Eve, now, wasn't thought any worse of, and moved in the first society, till she found she was naked." "My dear Mrs. P." said Mrs. Sled interrupting her, "this is a woman that is thought to be, in some respects, like the animal called a bear." "Oh, ah," said the old lady, "well, I don't know which would be the improperest to make a public thing of, for corruptured taste is as bad as viscerated morals." This was a profound remark, and the old lady stood holding her box long after she had uttered it, looking abstractedly at a picture of Susannah and the Elder over the mantlepiece. Ah! that top, Ike, has gone into the preserves, and reeks with gathered sweets, and that blush about thy mouth is of a deeper dye than shame could awaken, Ike!

Old Father Morris.

BY MRS. H. BEECHER STOWE.

Of all the marvels that astonished my childhood, there is none that I remember with this day with so much interest as the old man whose name forms my caption. When I knew him he was an aged clergyman, settled over an obscure church in New England. He had enjoyed the advantages of a liberal education, had a strong, original power of thought, an omnipotent imagination and much general information; but so early and so deeply had the habits and associations of the plow, the farm and country life, wrought themselves into his mind, that his after acquirements could only mingle with them forming an unexampled amalgamation like unto nothing but itself.

He was an ingrain New Englander and whatever might have been the source of his information, it came out in Yankee form, with the strong provinciality of Yankee dialect.

It is in vain to attempt to give a full picture of such a genuine unique: but some slight and imperfect dashes may help the imagination to a faint idea of what none can fully conceive but those who have heard old Father Morris.

Suppose yourself one of a half dozen children, and you hear the cry, "Father Morris is coming!" You run to the window or door, and see a tall, bulky old man, with a pair of saddle-bags on one arm, hitching his old horse with a fumbling carefulness, and then deliberately stumping towards the house. You notice his tranquil, florid, full-moon countenance, lightened by a great pair of round blue eyes, that roll with dreamy inattentiveness on all the objects around; and as he takes off his hat, you see the white curling wig that sets off his round head. He comes towards you and as you stand staring, with all the children around, he deliberately puts his great hand on your head, and with a deep voice, inquires—

"How d'ye do, my darter? Is your daddy at home?" "My darter" usually makes off as fast as possible, in an unconquerable giggle. Father Morris goes into the house, and we watch him at every turn, as, with the most liberal simplicity, he makes himself at home, takes off his wig, wipes down his great face with a checked pocket handkerchief, helps himself, hither and thither, to what he wants, and asks for what he cannot lay his hands on, with all the comfortable ease of childhood.

I remember to this day how we used to peep through the crack of the door, and hold it half ajar and peep in, to watch his motions; and how mightily diverted we were with his deep, slow manner of speaking, his heavy, cumbrous walk, but above all, with the wonderful faculty of "hemming" which he possessed.

His deep, thundering, protracted "A-hem-en," was like nothing else that I ever heard; and when once he was in the midst of one of these performances, the parlor door happened to swing open suddenly, I heard one of my roguish brothers calling in a suppressed tone, "Charles! Charles! Father Morris has hemmed the door open!"—and then followed signs of a long and desperate titter, in which I sincerely sympathized.

But the morrow is Sunday. The old man rises in the pulpit. He is now in his own little humble parish, preaching simply to the hoers of corn and the planters of potatoes; but here sits Gov. D, and there is Judge R., and counsellor P., and Judge G.

In short, he is before a refined and literary audience. But Father Morris rises; he thinks nothing of this; he cares nothing; he knows nothing, as he himself would say, "but Jesus Christ and him crucified." He takes a passage of Scripture to explain; perhaps it is the walk of Emmaus and the conversation with his disciples. Immediately the whole would start out before you, living and picturesque; the road to Emmaus is a New England turnpike; you can see its milestones, its mullen stalks, and its toll-gates. Next, the disciples rise, and you have before you all their anguish, and hesitation, and dismay, talked out to you in the language of your own fireside. You smile, you are amused, yet you are touched, and the illusion grows every moment. You see the approaching stranger, and the mysterious conversation grows more and more interesting. Emmaus rises in the distance, in the likeness of a New England village, with a white meeting house and spire. You follow the travellers; you enter the house with them; nor do you wake from your trance, until with streaming eyes the preacher tells you that "they saw it was the Lord Jesus—and what a pity they could not have known it before!"

It was after a sermon on this very chapter of scripture history that Gov. Griswold, in passing out of the house, laid hold on the sleeve of his first acquaintance; "Pray tell me," said he, "who is this minister."

"Why, it is old Father Morris."

"Well, he is an oddity and a genius too, I declare," he continued. "I have been wondering all the morning how I could have read the Bible to so little purpose as not to see all these particulars he has presented."

I once heard him narrate, in this picturesque way, the story of Lazarus. The great bustling city of Jerusalem first rises to view, and you are told, with great simplicity, how the Lord Jesus "used to get tired of the noise;" and how he was "tired of preaching again and again, to people who would not mind a word he said;" and how, "when it came evening, he used to go out and see his friends in Bethany." Then he told about the house of Mary and Martha; "a little white house among the trees," he said, "you could see it from Jerusalem." And thence the Lord Jesus and his disciples used to go, and sit evenings with Mary, Martha and Lazarus.

Then the narrator went on to tell how Lazarus died, describing with tears and a choking voice, the "kiss they were in, and now they sent a message to the Lord, and he did not come, and how they wondered and wondered; and thus he went on, winding up the interest with the graphic minutiæ of an eye-witness, till he woke you from the dream by his triumphant joy at the resurrection scene.

On another occasion, as he was sitting at a tea-table unusually supplied with the cakes and sweet-meats, he found an opportunity to make a practical allusion to the same family story. He said that Mary was quiet and humble, sitting at her Saviour's feet to hear his words; but Martha thought more of what was to be got for tea. Martha could not find time to listen to Christ. No; she was "cumbered about much serving"—around the house, frying fritters and making gingerbread.

Among his own simple people his style of scripture-painting was listened to with breathless interest. But it was particularly in those circles, called "conference meetings," that his whole warm soul unfolded, and the Bible in his hands became a gallery of New England paintings.

He particularly loved the Evangelists, following the footsteps of Christ, dwelling upon his words, repeating over and again the stories of what he did, with all the fond veneration of an old and favored servant.

Sometimes, too, he would give the narrative an exceedingly practical turn, as an example will illustrate.

He had noticed a falling off in his little circle that met for social prayer, and took occasion, the first time he collected a tolerable audience to tell concerning the "conference meeting that the disciples attended after the resurrection.

"But Thomas was not with them. Thomas was not with them," said the old man in a sorrowful voice. Why, what could keep Thomas away? "Perhaps," said he, glancing at some of his backward auditors, "Thomas had got cold-hearted, and was afraid they would ask him to make the first prayer, or perhaps," said he, looking at some of the farmers, "Thomas was afraid the roads were bad; or perhaps," he added, after a pause, "Thomas had got proud, and thought he could not come in his old clothes." Thus he went on, significantly summoning up the common [illegible] of his people, and then, with great [illegible] and emotion he added, "but only Thomas lost! for in the midst of [illegible] ing, the Lord Jesus came and stood [illegible] them! How [illegible] This representa[illegible] seats for some time to come.

At another time Father Morris gave the details of the anointing of David to be King. He told them how Samuel went to Bethlehem, to Jesse's house, and went in with a "How d'ye do, Jesse?" and how, when Jesse asked him to take a chair, he said he could not stay a minute; that the Lord had sent him to annoint one of his sons for a King; and how, when Jesse called in the tallest and handsomest, Samuel said "he would not do," and how all the rest passed the same test; and at last how Samuel says, "Why, have you not any more sons, Jesse?" and Jesse says, "why, yes, there is little David down in the lot;" and how as soon as ever Samuel saw David, "he slashed the oil right on to him;" and how Jesse said, "he never was so beat in all his life."

Father Morris sometimes used his illustrative talent to very good purpose, in the way of rebuke. He had on his farm a fine orchard of peaches, from which some of the ten or twelve-year-old gentlemen helped themselves more liberally than even the old man's kindness thought expedient.

Accordingly he took occasion to introduce into his sermon one Sunday, in his little parish, an account of a journey he took; and how he was very "warm and very dry; and how he saw a very fine orchard of peaches that made his mouth water to look at them. So," says he, "I came up to the fence, and looking all around, for I would not have touched one of them without leave for all the world, at last I spied a man, and says I, 'Mister, won't you give me some of your peaches?' so the man came, and gave nigh about a hat full. And while I stood there eating, I said, 'Mister how do you manage to keep your peaches?' 'Keep them!' said he, and he stared at me; 'what do you mean?' 'Yes,' said I, 'don't the boys steal them?' 'Boys steal them,' said he; 'no, indeed!' 'Why, sir,' said I, 'I have a lot full of peaches, and I cannot get half of them,'—here the old man's voice grew tremulous—'because the boys in my parish steal them so.' 'Why, sir,' said he, 'don't their parents teach them not to steal?' And I grew all over in a cold sweat and I told him, 'I was afeared they didn't.' 'Why, how you talk!' said the man; 'do tell me where you live!' Then, said Father Morris, the tears running over, "I was obliged to tell him I lived in the town of G." After this Father Morris kept his peaches.

Our old friend was not less original in theological than in the illustrative portions of his discourses. His logic was of that familiar coloquial kind which shakes hands with common sense like an old friend. Sometimes too, his great mind and his great heart would be poured out in the vast themes of religion, in language which, though homely, produced all the effects of the sublime. He once preached a discourse on the text, "the High and Holy One that inhabiteth eternity;" and from the beginning to the end it was a train of lofty and solemn thought. When in his usual simple earnestness, and his great rolling voice he told about "the Great God—the Great Jehovah—and how the people in this world were flustering and worrying, afraid they should not get time to do this, and that, and t'other. But," he added, with a full-hearted satisfaction, "the Lord is never in a hurry; he has it all to do, but he has time enough for he inhabiteth eternity." And the grand idea of infinite leisure and almighty resources, was carried through the sermon with equal strength and simplicity. Although the old man never seemed to be sensible of anything tendering to the ludicrous in his mode of expressing himself, yet he made a considerable relish for humor, and some shrewdness at repartee. One time as he was walking through a neighboring parish, famous for its profanity, he was stopped by a whole flock of the youthful reprobates of the place:

"Father Morris, Father Morris! the devil's dead!"

"Is he?" said the old man, benignly laying his hand on the head of the nearest urchin; "you poor fatherless children!"

But the sayings and doings of this good old man, as reported in the legends of the neighborhood, are more than can be gathered, and reported. He lived far beyond the common age of man, and continued, when age had impaired his powers, to tell over and over again the same Bible stories that he had told so often before.

I recollect hearing the joy that almost broke the old man's heart, when, after many years' diligent watching and nurture of the good seed in his parish, it began to spring into vegetation, sudden and beautiful as that which answers the patient watching of the husbandman. Many a hard, worldly-hearted man—many a sleepy, inattentive hearer—many a listless, idle young person, began to give ears to words that had long fallen unheeded. A neighboring minister, who had been sent for to see and rejoice in these results, describes the scene when on entering the little church, he found an anxious, crowded auditory, assembled around their venerable teacher, waiting for direction and instruction. The old man was sitting in his pulpit, almost choking with the fulness of emotion as he gazed around. "Father," said the youthful minister. "I suppose you are ready to say with old Simeon, 'Now, Lord, lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, for my eyes have seen thy salvation.' "Sartin, sartin," said the old man, while the tears streamed down his cheeks, and his whole frame shook with emotion.

It was not many years after that this simple and loving servant of Christ, was gathered in peace unto him whom he loved. His name is fast passing from remembrance, and in a few years his memory, like this humble grave, will be entirely grown over and forgotten among men, though it will be had in everlasting remembrance by Him who "forgetteth not his servants," and in whose sight the death of his servants are precious.

From the Memorandum of Opinions on Canadian Affairs presented to the Home Government by Col. Fitzgibbon.

The late hostile attitude assumed by the United States Government towards Great Britain, has of course, called forth a deal of comment in the British press, and from individuals. Among those who have expressed their opinion with regard to the military security of these Provinces, in any case of hostilities, we find the name of Col. Fitzgibbon, than whom no one thing living, is perhaps better entitled to speak with authority; because he, the favored friend and companion of General Brock, and the hero of the Beech Woods, speaks from a wider range of actual experience, and more mature reflection than most other military men on this subject. We have received a copy of a pamphlet written by him in 1848, which has been reproduced and from which our readers will doubtless peruse with interest a few extracts.

"Let the union of all the Provinces be Federal, or other, as the Imperial Parliament may decide.

The United States have but four ports or harbours peculiarly eligible for naval purposes; namely, Boston, New York, the Chesepeake, and Pensacola. With such a seaboard and without a numerous sea-going people, the United Sates cannot become a great naval power. Their commercial marine employs about 100,000 seamen, 10,000 only, of whom are native Americans. But add to them the Bay of Fundy with harbors therein; Halifax, the noblest naval station in America; the Islands in the Gulf and in the River St. Lawrence, and the shores of that river on the south side up to Quebec, then down the north shore to Labrador; the island of New Foundland with fisheries in the neighboring seas and on their extensive coasts; the boundless coal-fields of New Brunswick and Cape Breton, with the inexhaustible forests of timber in all the Provinces, and at one blow you quadruple the naval means of the United States, and by the same blow you cut off the right arm of England's naval power.

Let it be further considered that the canals now in course of construction, will lead to the building of ships upon the lakes in Upper Canada, the hulls of which may be floated down to Quebec, and be there rigged and equipped for sea, and may then be loaded with provisions for the use of the navy, or for other home consumption, whereby a saving of public money might be made. The time will come when all the ships wanted by England, either for commerce or war, may hereafter be built on these lakes and floated down to the ocean. And as the canals now in the course of construction be not large enough, they may be increased in size to any required extent, and the vast future increase of trade will pay for all such increase; for the waters of the St. Lawrence never rise more than three feet above their lowest level, the lakes above neutralizing or regulating such rise by their vast surfaces; the increase of the canals may therefore be made at the least possible cost. The Missisippi cannot be canaled at all, because its waters sometimes rise sixty feet above its lowest level, having no lake to check or regulate its periodical overflowings.

Therefore "Let not these Provinces be lost or given away."

"Thus far I wrote to England in 1838: To which I add, now in July, 1849, the following statement of facts and opinions.

In the summer of 1813, this last summer the hulls of two American steam boats, built at Sacket's Harbor, on Lake Ontario, and intended for service on the Pacific Ocean, were floated down the St. Lawrence to Montreal. [illegible] cers had cruisers given to them [illegible] Thus was achieved, in part, what, in 1838, I had stated to the Lords of the Admiralty would, I had no doubt be accomplished at no distant day. And only a few days ago I read in a newspaper in London, an account of two more steam vessels being floated down this present summer.

Let the British Government and people consider what might not improbably follow the possession of all those advantages to the American people. With Russia in possession of the Baltic and Black Sea on one side, and all North America in possession of the United States on the other, and both allied for the purpose of driving Great Britain from the ocean, how long could England supply herself with timber, hemp, and all the other materials required for sustaining her ships of war and mercantile marine? Let it not be forgotten that such a coalition between that Despotism and the Republic, has once already been contemplated; namely, in 1812.

Need I again repeat the memorable words of his late Majesty; William the Fourth, "Let not these Provinces be lost or given away."

As to the military power of the United States the time is, I consider, far distant when it can become formidable, beyond their own frontiers, to any country well defended. Their people are too comfortable to go for soldiers, and to submit to military discipline and be shot at for soldier's pay. Hence their chief difficulty in raising a numerous army; and their militia have hitherto refused to serve beyond their own frontier. The armies of the United States must, for ages to come, be chiefly made up of heterogenous masses of foreigners. But after the recent hostile conduct of the native American party, called "The Know Nothings," towards all European Imigrants, will those Imigrants stand forward in "the front of the battle," to fight for a Government and institutions from the privileges of which they are now specially excluded? When in Congress in 1812, the question of declaring war against Great Britain was debated, Mr. Pickering asked how the U. S. could injure England? General Porter said he could take Upper Canada with a corporal and six men to carry a flag; believing that the majority of its inhabitants were ready to join the United States. Such was then the general belief in those States, and such it was, also, in 1837. Yet when the days of trial came, the majority promptly gave the lie to General Porter and his confident and credulous countrymen. Yet now, again is the same belief more loudly proclaimed than ever. And now again do I confidently declare my unwavering belief that the majority of the people of Canada will as promptly as ever belie that slander, if they be not now unjustly or unkindly treated by the Imperial Government in the present anomalous crisis. Other members of Congress said let us invade the Canadas with 50,000 men at Amherstburg, 50,000 men at Niagara, 50,000 men at Montreal! I was then in Canada and well knew, as I then said to my friends, that the United States Government could not raise 50,000; and in point of fact their whole regular army, during that war, never amounted at any one time, to 25,000. Their armies invaded Upper and Lower Canada in the consecutive summers of 1812, '13, and '14, and at the close of each campaign they did not possess an inch of either Province. While our army captured their chief fortress, Fort Niagara, at the end of the second campaign, and kept it until peace was concluded, in Feby 1815, when it was restored.

As to the American armies I do not hesitate to characterize them as very refractory, not even excepting their officers. And the more numerous they be, the more unmanageable, I am confident, they must become. Many proofs of insubordination were given in evidence before the Court Martial which tried and condemned General Hull for his surrender of Fort Detroit to General Brock, in 1812. One instance of this I give from those proceedings, as published in the United States.

While General Hull's army were marching through the forest, on their route to Detroit, in July 1812, they halted one day, as usual, about three o'clock. Soon after the General's tent was pitched, he heard an unusual noise in the camp, and sent one of his Aides-de-Camp to inquire the cause and report it to him. This officer soon returned and said, "It is nothing, General, only a company of Ohio Volunteers riding their Captain on a rail!"—a species of indignity tantamount to tarring and feathering.

This fact, with other similar ones, the General brought before the Court to show how little he could expect to achieve with an army so constituted as that was which he commanded.

Two other facts, to the same effect, I now give here, from information received by me from two American officers while in conversation in Canada.

On my arrival at Fort George, with a detachment under my command from Kingston, in January, 1813, I found there a captain of the American army, lately taken prisoner on that frontier. Having once been a prisoner of war in France, in 1799, I felt a consequent sympathy for this officer, and therefore called upon him. I repeated my visits daily for some time, and our acquaintance became rather an intimate one. One day he said, "I left my native state, in the south, some months ago, to make war upon you, British, in this Province. I then entertained very unfavorable opinions of British officers, I believed them to be a proud, haughty, tyrannical class of men. In a few days after joining our army at Buffalo, I was sent in command of a detachment to attack your batteries, and succeeded in capturing one of them. But General Smyth not having promptly supported me, I and my detachment were taken prisoners.

"Soon after my arrival in this fort, the officers of the regiment here invited me to become an honorary member of their mess, and I accepted the invitation. But instead of them being proud and haughty, I find them frank and kind, and very attentive to me, I look through my windows over your barrack square, and I see that those officers treat their men with more condescension and kindness, than we can treat ours. Were we to deal with our men as I see you deal with yours, we should lose all authority over them. We feel ourselves compelled to keep them at a distance, in short, to rule them with a rod of iron."

The second conversation I had was with Thomas Jefferson Southerland, the soi-distant General commanding the assembled body of sympathizers collected in Detroit in 1838, to invade Canada. In attempting to reconnoitre the out-posts, he came over our lines with his Aide-de-Camp, when his path was crossed by Colonel Prince of Sandwich, who was driving by in his sleigh. The Colonel shrewdly suspecting what their object must be, pulled up, and jumping out with his rifle, in an instant made them both prisoners, and drove them to Sandwich. They were soon after sent to Toronto, where the General was tried by a Militia Court Martial, of which I was the Acting Judge advocate. After the trial, the proceedings of the Court were sent to England for the decision of the Imperial Government, and the prisoners was transferred from the garrison to the district guol in the city for safe keeping until further orders.

Entertaining for him a different kind of sympathy than he and his myrmidons had lately proclaimed for our Canadian people, I visited him occasionally, and gave him a few volumes to be perused by him on his passage to Van Dieman's Land, whither I doubted not he would be transported. Thus I became on intimate terms with this American also.

One day he addressed me to the following effect:—"By my late proceedings I have acquired a kind of experience on joining my sympathizing countrymen, and for which I am likely to pay far too dear a price. I am now convinced that the people of the United States are, as soldiers, very unmanageable, even from the highest to the lowest of them. I one day detatched from Detroit my second in command, Gen. Theller, with a schooner full of men, to take posession of Point Pele Island, below Amherstburg, and there to wait until I should join him with the remainder of our force. On passing Amherstburg, however he thought it had a very defenceless appearence and he suddenly decided on attacking it, in the hope of taking the feather out of my cap, as the saying has it, and thereby raising himself to eminence. He had made an attack, but failed, being with his men and schooner captured by your people. And thus was my then plan, entirely frustrated. In short, our people are very unfit materials for soldiers."

Much to this effect has already become public by what has appeared in the newspapers of the recent doings in Mexico; and much more, no doubt, existed but which may never become public. Neither does the success which attended the American army in Mexico at all change my opinions of the inefficiency of that army. The hope of finding riches in that country, no doubt, induced many to join that army, and the well known feeble character of the Mexicans gave more confidence and energy to the American than they could display before an army of undoubted skill, and well known individual strength and bravery.

From the experience I have had during the late war in Canada, and from all that I have heard and read, I have no doubt but that the present population of the North American provinces, cordially united and supported by the troops now (1849) in those provinces, would promptly defeat and drive back into their own territory an invading American army of 100,000 men.

Let the Imperial Government now unite those Provinces, and then be just and indulgent to their people, and neither seperation by desire of the Provincials, nor conquest by the U. States, need be apprehended.

So united and held by affection to the parent State, as I am fully convinced a vast majority of the Provincials ardently desire to be, their neighbors may invade the Provinces, but assuredly with no better result than attended their armies in 1812, '13, and '14."

Dr. Guthrie on Popular Amusements.

The love of excitement is so engraven in our nature that it may be regarded as an appetite. Like our other appetites, it is not sinful, unless indulged unlawfully, or to excess. It is the duty of patriotic and Christian men to restrain these within due limits, and direct them into innocent channels. Indeed, it would appear that God has implanted such a feeling in all his creatures, for the purpose, no doubt, of ministering to their happiness. Did you never see a kitten chasing its own tail? Were you never amused with that? Those who are shut up for life in large towns, and never see horses but in the yoke, nor any of the feathered tribes but a sooty, bedrimed, and melancholy sparrow, may be ignorant of the habits and happiness of the lower animals; but who, accustomed to the country, has not seen the crows on a summer evening wheeling, chasing, and darting at each other in the blue sky overhead, and the trouts amusing themselves, much after the same fashion, in some glassy pool? I have seen a merry flock of kids disputing in great good humour which should hold the stump of a decayed tree, and, without a blush, confess to having reined up my steed, and with the old greybeards—the grandfathers and great-grandfathers of the youngsters—who formed a delightful circle of spectators—I have stayed to see the play. And often last summer did I sit in my boat to watch the butting, capering, racing, dancing, of a herd of red deer on the shores of Lochee, and never thought ill on that account, either of them or of myself. I don't envy that man his heart who does not feel happy to see God's creatures happy, nor praises God for his kindness to the meanest of them. Now, to frown on this love of excitement and amusement, as if it were guilty and a sin, appears to me a reflection on Providence. I will not reject any gift which God has given, but take it thankfully, and try to use it well. Take the case in hand—the musical entertainments in Dunedin Hall, which, although their harmony has been followed by so much discord, I shall continue to support so long as they are conducted as they have been begun. If the devil gave man an ear for music, and the pleasure in music which those gifted with such an ear enjoy, then let the whole art be denounced; but if this is a gift of God, let it be consecrated to His service in the church, and out of it also, by being used not only as a source of innocent, thankful enjoyment, but as a means of weaning of keeping ourselves or others from debasing and forbidden pleasures. This is a noble use to make of music; and I cannot take blame to myself either for the end I had in view, or for the means by which I sought to gain it, when I countenanced the entertainment in Dunedin Hall.—Glasgow Advertiser.

HEIR WANTED FOR A MILLION AND A HALF OF MONEY.—A gentleman, of this city, this morning received a letter from Portadown, County Armagh, Ireland, making inquiries in relation to the heirs of John White, who emigrated from the County of Armagh, Ireland, somewhere about the year 1814 or 1815, and who is believed to have left two sons—Abner and William. There is about a million and a half of money for the lucky Whites who can "prove property," &c.

Slavery—Republicanism.

American Tract Society.—American Sunday School Union.

1. The American Tract Society of New York, and the American Sunday School Union of Philadelphia, U. S. in their various publications, intentionally avoid and omit all allusion to and keep silence and are mute on Slavery, and its vile and sinful system, and as practised in the United States,—thereby endeavouring to set up a system of religious education and knowledge, without any reference to the special sin of their country—namely, American Slavery. Such publications are sold and circulated in Canada.

2. The American Tract Society has besides in too many instances (more than are published) in their editions or alleged copies, of original books, omitted and expurgated words and sentences referable to slavery, and inserted words not the author's,—and the American Tract Society, has also kept out and omitted sentences in books where not applicable to slavery, as in D'Aubigne's History of the Reformation and other books, as sold to us, to be used as books of reference.

3. Above all, the American S. S. Union has declared in its publications, that one of its objects in its system of Sunday School education, is to Americanise and republicanise—and that those taught are to be made acquainted with their system of government, thereby inculcating political sentiments; and the Agents of the S. S. Union, are in various parts of the Province establishing schools based on that system of the A. S. S. Union.

4. That the American Tract Society has also a direct political tendency, for by them it also is declared, that their enterprise is as republican as their American institutions,—contributes to Americanise their emigrant population,—to bring them into sympathy with their institutions.—and to fraternise with their views of religion and government,—to welcome them to a participation in all that is precious in their institutions,—and that the Society's field for labor, includes the Canadian provinces! These things to know, may be new, to many in Canada,—and now thus publicly declared for the first time,—but their truth will be found on examination. The Colportage system of the American Tract Society (so ably but vauntingly represented by them) is carried out in many parts of Canada, and books, tracts and periodicals ("Child's Paper" and "American Messenger") are sold and given to our population, ignorant no doubt as many are, of the principles set forth, and the ommissions and silence referred to.

Dotted as our noble Province is,—and as it should be,—with locations of ministers of religion, whose mission is above and beyond all things to carry and exhibit all purity, the doctrines of the Cross, in the pulpit, in the Sabbath School, and the family,—they should be first forewarned so as to be forearmed,—and our County Boards, and also the General Board of Instruction, as applicable to the generous system of Education introduced by a Canadian government, and all Trustees of Common Schools,—they, one and all should investigate this matter, and endeavour to free our loyal Province from any books, or any system, which has and carries the objects above set forth.

This warning is also applicable to our own Religious Periodicals.

At the Depositories of the Tract Societies at Quebec, Montreal, (Milne's) and Religious Book Store, (Dougall's) 36 Great St. James street; Kingston, Toronto, (U. C. Tract Society and "Wesleyan Bookroom,") Hamilton, Dundas, Niagara and London,—books, &c., of the American Tract Society and American S. S. Union are obtained.

Sufficient proofs will be put into the possession of the publisher of this Notice to show its correctness.

JOHN J. E. LINTON.

Horrid Affair in Maysville.—Negro Burned to Death.

We are informed that on the Kentucky Thanksgiving day, a couple of young men of Maysville, whose family connections are described as of the highest respectability," were on a drunken spree at the "Parker House," in that place, and protracting their frolic until a very late hour, after all the household had retired to bed, attempted to arouse the barkeeper to procure more liquor, and failing in this, and succeeding in finding a yellow man, one of the waiters, asleep, concluded to set fire to him in order to awaken him! With this view, they took a camphene lamp, and pouring the fluid over his whiskers, ignited it, and the poor fellow's neck and head became instantly wrapped in an intense blaze, which continued until the fluid was consumed. The sufferings of the victim were dreadful in the extreme. No refinement of torture could have produced more excruciating misery. But, strange to say, death did not release him from torment until after the lapse of two weeks. The poor creature was the slave of Mr. Ball, keeper of the Parker House, who says, as our informant tells us, that no human suffering could exceed that of his boy during the fortnight that he lived after the burning. The young men "respectably connected," whose drunkenness resulted in this horror, are said to allege that they burned the negro by accident—that when holding the lamp to his face they managed to break it, and spill the fiery fluid upon him. The young men are rich. They have agreed to pay Mr. Ball $1,200 for the loss of his servant. Our informant says that no one in Maysville speaks of this transaction without a shudder of horror, but that no movement has been made toward a legal investigation of the matter, and that the "high position" of the parties implicated will overawe any such movement. We ask the citizens of Maysville, in the name of their honor, if these things can be true?

WHAT'S IN A NAME?—George Washington was sold the other day in Virginia for $1000! For what intent could the name of Washington have been given to a slave! Did his mother fancy it as a prophecy of freedom?—or did his master give it as a burlesque? How did that name sound, ringing under the hammer of the auctioneer—"George Washington 800—here in Virginia—900—George Washington only 900—950—going, going, $1000 for George Washington——GONE."

HIGH PRICE FOR NEGROES. The Montgomery Journal learns that at an estate sale, a few days since, of the late Mr. Siller, of Pike County, Ala., ninety negroes sold at $64,000—an average of about $700. These, it is stated, also were inferior negroes, the refuse of a stock of hands.

IMPORTANT TO SLAVE-OWNERS.—A gentleman informs us that, some few mornings since, while standing at one of the railroad depots in this city, he saw a free negro go to the ticket office, exhibit his free papers, and then purchase a passage ticket to a neighbouring town. Immediately after, he saw this same negro furnish a servant with a ticket he had procured, and the slave, instead of the free negro, left in the cars. If impositions of this sort can be practiced on the railroad companies by free negroes, owners of slaves have no earthly security for their property.—Richmond Despatch.

☞ The Syracuse Chronicle says two hundred fugitive slaves have passed through that city the past year, and thirteen within the past twelve days.

Salt Your Cattle.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 22, 1855.

The season of foddering having commenced, it may be well to invite the attention of the farmers to the importance of salting and watering their cattle, horses and sheep, and the best mode of doing it in the winter. That they require at least as much salt and water, and as often, when fed on dry food as when feeding on grass, is so evident that I need not spend time to prove it; for I trust your readers are already convinced of the fact; but I wish to show them some advantages of giving salt oftener and in smaller quantities in winter than in summer. Many farmers salt none of their stock except cows, oftener than once a week in summer; and it is easy to see that if a sufficient quantity is given at once for the whole week, in cold weather, it will make them drink so much that they will suffer with the cold. Let me here say that in all seasons of the year, stock should be allowed as much water, and as often, as they require it; and in the winter, if they have not clean gravelly or sandy streams to drink at, the ground should be pared or dug out, so that they can get to the water without getting into the mud, by which they become liable to frost their feet. Straw in the yard where they have been fed to be rotting; but on the contrary, make them still more liable to freeze, because the warmer they become the more likely the animals are to throw them out from under their bodies.

Farmers have coarse, and sometimes damaged fodder, which may be brought into such a condition as to be as readily eaten by the cattle as the best of hay, by sprinkling on it some brine; and this will be found to be the best way of salting through the winter. There is not only an improvement in the poorest part of the fodder, so that stock will eat it without being "starved to it," but by being eaten it is not only more readily converted into manure, but also into a better quality than it would be if thrown into a heap to rot, where, even under shelter, it would, in the long process required, lose much of its value by evaporation. Farmers may use their pork brine in this way with perfect safety; for notwithstanding the poison which it has been clearly proved is imparted to brine by all kinds of meat, so moderate a use as I have recommended cannot injure stock. It is only when fed with meal or bran, or in some way in which a larger quantity is eaten than would be sprinkled on the fodder, that it is injurious. I have known hogs to sicken and die from eating salt meat that was spoiled for want of sufficient salt to save it, but dead carcases, tainted, and even rotting, are eaten without injury. Beef brine, owing to its disagreeable smell, is unsuited to this use; but it is perfectly adapted to another, as I intend to show your readers before seed time, in an article on wheat.

No kind of brine should be used for meat a second time. Some do it from motives of economy; but it may be put to other uses more economical, the scalding and skimming being saved, and it renders meat less wholesome, and more liable to taint.

Much impatience is manifested by some in regard to the organization of the house I think our friends are doing as well as they can under the circumstances, and I have seen nothing to change the opinion which I formed at the close of the elections. I still believe the Anti-Nebraska men—the Non-extension-of-slavery men, will act together on all questions relating to the paramount issue. When Congress met, there was a great battle to be fought; and doing it as far as possible by this quiet voting, is far better than to have organized immediately, and then hastened into hot debate. The common courtesies of life, which every member must observe if he would not be set down as a boorish fellow, will have formed a habit which cannot fail to exercise a restraining influence, to some extent at least, when the fierce war of words comes on. And some of the members having learned something of the calibre of their opponents, will doubtless deem it prudent to avoid attacks which would be likely to result in their own discomfiture. N. B. A Woman Swimming the Mississippi.

Lloyd's forthcoming steamboat Directory gives a thrilling instance of the necessity for women knowing how to swim. When the ill fated Ben Sherrod was in flames on the Mississippi River, and the lady passengers who had thrown themselves into the water were drowning around the boat, the wife of Captain Castleman jumped into the river, with her infant in her arms, and swam ashore, a distance of half a mile, being the only woman saved out of sixteen. She had learned to swim when a girl.

Renunciation of Spiritualism.

Mr. James F. Whitney, editor of the N. Y. Pathfinder, who was a leading spiritualist, has lately come out with a renunciation of the doctrine of spiritualism. He says that he has been "at the head of the most extensive establishment in existence for the investigation of the phenomena, publishing one of the leading journals, devoted entirely to the cause, and enjoying about the premises no less than eight mediums, for public sittings, for investigation and instruction, and this establishment being carried on at an expense of over two hundred dollars a week." And now, as the result of his intimate acquaintance with the subject, he pronounces the whole affair base and demoralizing.

PROVINCIAL FREEMAN.

CHATHAM, SATURDAY, JANUARY 26, 1856.

FARMING.

No business to which we would invite the attention of our readers, present so many inducements in our humble opinion as farming, especially in a country like our own. The artizan, the laborer, the professional man, though filling very important stations in an industrial community, must, in strict justice, give the first place to the son of the plough—to the practical and intelligent tiller of the soil. How vastly important is it that we should fully realize this truth! And were the acknowledgment of it more generally made, there is every reason to believe, that, much of the ruinous competition and abject misery to be found in crowded cities would be speedily done away with.

The farmer stands to other workers in the relation of chief producer; they to him, in that of positive consumers, and to their trades and businesses respectively, as producers of a secondary character. He furnishes the great staples which bear the same relative value in all parts of the world, and without which, the mechanic, professional man, and merchant, would be compelled to cease their avocations—their hammering, inventing, building, banking, and even the lawyers their subtlety, and go to digging, planting, and back to Adam's fig-leaves to get the "wherewith-all" to eat, drink and wear. Not only do they put bread and meat into the mouths, and furnish material for the cloth on the backs of other classes, but the direct demand made by them for implements, in iron, wood, leather, and other materials, to use in their business, and the use that they as a class make of their manufactured fabrics, supply the largest profits realized by the trades; so that, in a double sense, they are important. Take away the direct patronage of the farming country, from your large cities and towns, and they must become the merest hamlets in importance, as dull and lifeless, in comparison, as are Babylon and the cities of the Plain—no sound of the farm waggon wheels, nor sleighs, nor sleds,—no sight of the robust farmer and the good wife, to "shop" and trade,—to jostle and "hurry" in the desire to despatch the business and return to the distant home, miles away, and our deserted streets, dolorous merchants and men of business, would present a gaunt and terror-stricken appearance, worse than either at the time of Cholera or the Plague. Their woe-begone visages would make day hideous. Again from no business, when properly managed, can more satisfactory results, in a pecuniary way, be obtained.

From the irregular, careless, wasteful manner in which the science of farming is generally prosecuted, the negligent social habits consequently resulting, and a failure to comprehend the dignity of such an independent and responsible occupation, many really suited to engage with prudence and thrift in the business, and who would ere long attain to a creditable reputation as skilful agriculturists, turn aside to less profitable and congenial employments, from the erroneous opinion that such misdirected efforts and untoward results, constitute and are inseparable from practical farming, when they are a perversion of the system itself, and a failure to give due prominence to so respectable an avocation.

The true farmer is necessarily an economical man, an inventive man, one studious of personal and general comfort, a "tidy" man, in the external appearance of his form, and the general appearance of self, and appurtenances,—respecting his profession, and duly estimating its importance, he sets a corresponding value upon himself—neither fantastical in the arrangements of barns, buildings, fields, nor in general arrangement, nor foppish in manner, but with good ditches where needed, clean fields and fence corners, trim hedges, sound fences, well tilled fields, and well-fed stock,—as system of things which must result in a reasonable time, from patience, perseverance, and judicious management—he pre-eminently takes a commanding position. The certainty of the very best results from well-directed efforts as a farmer, should suggest the importance of getting hold of lands while they may be obtained at reasonable prices, and wherever they may be had. In truth, so much importance do we attach to agriculture, that we would be willing to encourage the leasing of lands, where parties are unable to buy, at once, as preferable to not settling upon lands at all. In our next we will allude to the injurious policy of settling upon lands without reference to other than mere local attraction or preference.

Canadian Towns.

We have thought, for some time, of laying before our readers, occasional glimpses of the different growing small towns and villages that lay along the route of travel in this western Canada, with some allusions to the principal business parties therein, for the better information of those who know comparatively little of our country, and its enterprising inhabitants; and by way of introducing the denizens of one section to the business capabilities and thrift of another. Montreal, Kingston, Toronto, Hamilton, London, those young giants in growth and prosperity, are cities on a hill, that all may see and know; and even our Chatham, though smaller than those named, is no "mean" city: she, too, is read of men, but not so of the numerous little busy places that sprinkle the country over like gems, though some of them are of respectable age; they need only to be known, to be "appreciated." For artizans and laborers as well as the professional man, they frequently hold out inducements that large and populous cities seldom present, especially to those aiming to create a business. Among places in our mind's eye, at this time, we will select the thriving little town of Amherstburg, and hereafter, as opportunity offers, shall refer at another time more particularly than has been done heretofore by our correspondents or others, to other places.

Amherstburg is, from its position, one of the most attractive towns in the Province; but from a combination of causes, man has kept it sadly in the back ground. It lies, too, in the immediate vicinity of one of the the most fertile agricultural districts of Canada west. The population in which the French element has heretofore greatly predominated, seems at last to have aroused to a sense of their existence on the face of the earth; and, as the result, here and there within its limits, evidences of enterprise gladden the eye of the stranger. Being situated on the Detroit river, and near its entrance into Lake Erie, the water privileges, and fisheries, are, or could be made second to no other place we know of. But as yet the night-mare of indifference, characteristic of the "old" inhabitants, has steadily refused to encourage one effort of the younger and more enterprising citizens. It will be a blessing to the place, when some of the old fogies thereabouts take their departure to a brighter sphere, as only then will those weather-worn dilapidated old tenements give place to more modern and substantial dwellings, and that part of the town, really the most valuable by position, be made serviceable to the country at large. At present, it is not exactly out of the world, by appearance, or the habits therein prevailing, neither is it fit to be in, from any consistency, feeling, and purpose, with the other part. Ignorance, and the begging system have been also great drawbacks upon the prosperity of the place, as well as French indolence. However, a brighter era has evidently dawned upon Amherstburg. From being the great radiating point of begging for the colored people, under the management of Isaac J. Rice, and a company of as graceless "sub"-agents as ever injured the prospects of a people, and by means of whom many colored and white seemed to live for no other purpose than to beg and traffic in the fruits of the same, to the moral poisoning of a large and important region of country, its citizens are becoming uncompromising in their hostility to the system. The Southern Railroad, the harbinger of general prosperity to them, as railroads are to a people disposed to enterprise, has many confident promoters, and as the result of having a purpose in view, of admitted utility, quite an extension of the town is being made in the vicinity of the contemplated route. New and pretty residences are springing up; lots are increasing in value daily, and business men and farmers from Colchester, New Canaan, and other parts of the County, are gradually gaining confidence. In fact, heretofore, not to the town of Amherstburg alone was the begging fever confined, but the entire country around was infected, so that it is possible that in no other region of equal fertility and plenty was ever the system encouraged with such bad effect upon the general welfare of all classes.

But Amherstburg has her men of enterprise, as before said, some of whom, though are but recent converts to the new order of things. Among the merchants, store-keepers, and small traders, whose business establishments are creditable to the place, are Messrs. Kemp, Noble, Smith, Gott, Crawford, Turner, and McGee. Among tradesmen, Messrs. Lyons, Spears, Payne and Gott, shoemakers and carpenters. Wholesale merchant, M. Salmoni. Livery stable, one by Mr. Foster, a very active accommodating and business man. He, too, and sons are plasterers and carpenters. One Daguerreotypist, the Rev. Wm. Troy, a very sensible and practical Minister. There are also very superior Ministers now in charge of the Church of England, Presbyterian and Methodist denominations. The Wesleyans, among the colored people, have quite a congregation, and preachers of the drive-a-head species; and the A. M. E. Church, though little, is efficient. In truth, there are plenty of preachers about Amherstburg, and the people are not such heathens, as to need missionaries from abroad. In some of the churches, the books of the American Sunday School Union are in use, but they are to be changed in the course of true progress.

The Amherstburg foundry, owned and conducted by Alexander Jones, Esq., is a building creditable to any town in Canada. In addition to turning out stoves of the best quality, he has an extensive tin-ware and Japan-ware factory, in all of which there are goods in great variety. There is contiguous to the foundry, a large carriage and sleigh factory, kept by Mr. Bungy, in which articles both durable and beautiful are constantly made. And last, but not least, among the notable establishments of this place, is a Distillery, owned by Mr. McCord. What assistance the death-dealing beverages therein made, may have innocently been in perpetuating the reign of beggary is uncertain, but the testimony of good men goes far toward establishing the certainty that since the fall of that dynasty, less bad spirits and less misery have been the portion of the people than fell to their lot previously. Altogether, a brighter future will doubtless be the portion of Amherstburg and vicinity, as large accessions are continually being made to the country around, and a laudable spirit is evident within her borders.

Correspondence.

For the Provincial Freeman.

CHICAGO, Jan. 10, 1855.

MR. EDITOR:—After a tedious journey of thirty-six hours from Detroit, I find myself in Chicago, which, to all appearance, is a very beautiful city; at present, however, it is so very cold, out of doors, that it is impossible to make the observations necessary to any very correct conclusion. You can judge of the state of the weather, when, according to those who know the thermometer was 30 degrees below Zero, at eight o'clock yesterday, and at 28 degrees later in the day. You can form a pretty correct idea of the capability of the colored American to resist the rigour of a northern climate, from such facts also. The force of that sort of argument resorted to, when attempts are made to encourage African colonization, is completely destroyed by the evident power of endurance displayed in resisting such cold weather; but it also removes a stumbling block in the way of Emigration to Canada; for the weather is colder here than I have ever known it in Canada. The citizens here seem to be progressing as fast as it is possible for them to do in the United States; they are generally intelligent and respectable, very hospitable, and certainly very liberal in their views. But with the superior inducements Chicago holds out over any other American city, I know of, for the colored people, there is evidently great uneasiness, and emigration has its advocates among the most intelligent classes.

I must close this very brief letter for the present, as matters relating to my business must now be attended to; but in my next, I hope to give something more definite of these western regions, for by that time it is hoped there will be a thaw, or some abatement of the intense cold which at present puts a prohibition upon active and out-door effort.

M. A. S.

To the Editor of the Provincial Freeman:

SIR:—Having seen an article in your paper respecting the Government Town of Shrewsbury, I am induced to add something thereto. There is not the slightest allusion made to show to your readers the goodness of the soil at and around this town. The soil is clay and sandy marl, mixed, of a redish color, capable of being cropped at least ten years, without any fertilizing substance added. The land around this town is in the state of nature. There is 800 acres adjoining this town, owned by a gentleman in Toronto, which is as valuable as any in Western Canada, of the same size; it fronts on the Rond Eau harbour; a Creek runs through it, navigable for small boats, and with little expense in dredging, could be made navigable for the largest class schooners. There is a Steam Saw Mill on this property, owned by Coatsworth & Co., which cuts from eight to twelve hundred feet of lumber per day, and the largest class schooners load within thirty rods of this mill. The time, in my opinion, is not far distant, when there will be a line of boats daily running into this harbor for wood and lumber, which will greatly increase the value of this land. The owner of this land is Mr. John Ewart. He wants this land cleared, and will give $10 per acre, and the first crop for clearing it. There is a great inducement for men of small capital to settle on this land, for this reason, they can cut any amount of grass on the Marsh, in front of this land, whenever they please, for their stock. The Marsh affords excellent pasture for cattle nine months in the year; so that any men settling here can bring on their stock, without fear of starving them. Now, Sir, what more can men ask for, except the deed to be given them.

Adjoining this land, is a tract of 1000 acres, belonging to Mr. William Hale, of London. He, too, wants his land settled. He offers to lease his land for the term of ten years, free of rent or all incumbrance, except the assessed taxes. This land, if possible, surpasses the other, on account of its having two creeks running through it; one of these creeks will average six feet of water for one mile into the heart of the timber, where settlers can bank wood on either side. Mr. Hale requires 150 acres to be cleared and fenced in ten acre lots; on fields out of 200 acres, to be left together, at or near the centre of each 200 acres. He has leased 400 acres to five respectable farmers.

Now, Sir, any industrious man can lay up money on these terms. The land is capable of producing 35 bushels of wheat to the acre, and 40 has been raised. I think these few hints will have the necessary effect of settlers coming here early in the ensuing spring, as the wood will always be saleable, so near the town of Shrewsbury, which is but one and a half miles from this land.

Respectfully yours,

FRANCIS H. LAWRENCE.

Rond Eau, Jan. 23, 1856.

Arrival of the Washington.

NEW YORK, Jan. 22.

The steamship Washington, from Southampton, arrived at 4 o'clock last evening, with the German, French, and English mails, and about 30 passengers.

The departure of the Washington was delayed four days. She arrived at Cowes en route to Bremen and Havre, and having transshipped her mails and passengers for England, proceeded on her voyage, arriving off Havre on the 21st.

The Captain was informed by two pilots who came on board that the river Weser was frozen up, and that it would not be safe for him to proceed with his ship.

The following is the report of the London Stock Exchange, dated 11, A. M. Saturday, 5th inst.

Consols 87 1-8, Turkish 4 per cent script 4 a 3¼ discount.

An exchange of Russian and French prisoners took place recently at Odessa.

Among the French prisoners, were Gen. Gevnah and three officers of the Dantour, who were captured by the Cossacks, while landing shot at the harbor of Kinburn.

The Naples correspondent of the London Times mentions a report that the King of Naples had become favorably disposed towards the Allies, and there was a further rumor that he would send a contingent to the Crimea.

The Paris correspondent of the same paper says, that assurances have been again given in an official character, of the resolution of France, to carry on the war in a most vigorous manner, in the event of Russia's not acceding to the propositions of the Allies.

Arrival of the 'Africa.'

NEW YORK, Jan. 23.

The Africa arrived at her dock this morning at 9 o'clock.

Nothing new of importance.

Peace question unchanged.

Wheat in good demand at 6c higher.

Flour in better demand and 9d. dearer.

Lard favors buyers at 68s. 6d. outside.

Beef, in rather better request.

Pork, still and neglected.

The Baltic's arrival will test the market.

Consols about 86¼ a 86⅜.

News consists principally of the extension of Peace rumors by the previous steamers.

Russia's answer cannot arrive till the 10th; but, probably, some days later, and is expected will contain neither an absolute assent nor a refusal, but will make counter proposal, to be settled by renewed conferences.

The feeling in England continues warlike, and in France is again becoming so.

Russia continues incessant preparations.

No later news from the Crimea.

The French blew up one of the Sebastopol docks, on the 22d.

Affairs in Asia are unchanged.

British news unimportant.

The Grand Council of Allied Generals is now open in Paris.

The Conference on the Danish Dues is postponed indefinately.

Rumors are revived of Naples joining the Allies.

Sweden is making active warlike preparations.

The America sailed from Liverpool.

The Baltic arrived on the morning of the 8th.

The latest Berlin papers speak not unfavorably of the disposition of Russia to consider the Allies' proposition.

London, Wednesday, 9th.

English funds yesterday morning advanced nearly 3-8 at opening out; a relapse subsequently took place, closing at yesterday's prices.

Money easy and in good demand at 5 per cent.

Asia.

The Russian army took possession of Kars on the 3rd of December.

The troops are quartered in town.

The Russians had collected large stores of provisions.

The Russian General is apprehensive of an attack on Kars by Salim Pasha, and consequently has concentrated all his available forces at that point.

Further by the Africa.

The Russian attack on Erzeroum is not considered probable at present in consequence of the exhaustion of the troops and the state of the roads.

Nothing definite was yet known from St. Petersburg. Speculations were very contradictory.

Interviews had taken place between Nesselrode and Esterhazy, but the main question had not been discussed.

The most that is expected from Russia is a modified counter-proposal, such as may ensure further negotiations and delay. In the meantime the tone of the French Government has become more warlike, while Russian preparations for continuing the contest are larger than ever.

Bavaria is sending an envoy to St. Petersburg.

It is again confidently asserted that Austria will submit three propositions to the German Diet and call on it to report them.

Dates from the Crimea are to the 25th ultimo.

The Russians are increasing their fortifications over against Inkermann.

Pellissier remains in the Crimea.

Gen Mortmpec will not act as his proxy at the Council of War at Paris.

No injury had been done to the fleet by the last storm.

Omer Pacha's army suffer much from lack of provisions, in consequence of which he had been compelled to fall back.

The Council of War at Constantinople were directing all their energies to the defence of Erzeroum.

ADDITIONAL.

Lord Panmure has this day received a dispatch, of which the following is a copy addressed to his Lordship by Gen. Sir Wm. Codrington, K. C. B.

SEBASTOPOL, Dec. 25.

MY LORD,—Notwithstanding the severe weather, the thermometer a few nights ago having fallen nearly to zero. The general state of the army has continued good—the roads are in a fair working order, and though the efficiency of the locomotive engines, was impaired by the frost, the damage has been made good.

The finale operations on the Docks have been somewhat delayed on our side by the influx of the water, and by the freezing of the pumps.

The fire from the forts on the north side of the Harbour continues, and it is at times heavy, but the casualties I am happy to say are few.

There has been no movement of importance by the enemy in our neighborhood of late.

A detachment of French troops surprised a Cossack fort near Teilon a few days ago, killing several men, and the rest were taken prisoners.

The general drill of the army makes good progress.

Baltic Preparations.

Three ships are to be fitted out with all possible expedition.

CHERBOURG is to arm the war screw Transport of 12,000 tons.

The naval authorities of Cherbourg have been ordered to arm 3 screw liners, and three sailing frigates, which are to be ready for the opening of the campaign in the Baltic, in the month of April next, and the 5 Bomb vessels, and the 12 gun-boats which have returned from the last campaign in the Baltic, are to form part of the formidable expedition which is to operate in that sea next spring.

HAMBURG, Jan 4th.

The news from Sweden state that Gen. Black, Minister of War in Norway and Commander-in-Chief of the Army, has been directed to arrange the Norwegian troops in consort with the head of the war department at Stockholm.

The Swedish Journal Faderlander, reports under date Stockholm, Dec. 24, that unexampled activity reigns in every manufactory for producing articles necessary to the equipment of an Army.

The Colonels of all the regiments have received orders to prepare their troops for marching at the first signal. The order was given secretly, but it was in its nature impossible of concealment. All leaves of absence to officers are refused.

Every body here believes that in case the Allies open the war with vigor in the Baltic next spring, our Government will feel compelled to take an active part therein.

MARSEILLES, Jan. 6th.

The following American vessels engaged by the French Government for the transport of war materials to the Crimea, are now in the docks; Great Republic, Queen of Clippers, Monarch of the Sea, Ocean Herald, Titan, White Falcon, Astoria.

How Machinery Increases Beneficial Labour.

About five years ago, when sewing machines were beginning to be introduced into this city, some furious attacks were made upon them by ignorant and mock philanthropists, who pretended to be anxiously concerned for the poor seamstresses. They pictured the sad fate which awaited those persons; told how the hard-earned bread was to be taken out of their mouths by such capitalists as could purchase and use such machines, thereby dispensing with the labour of needlewomen, and thus bring them to want for lack of employment. Have such predictions been fulfilled? We, who have for years carefully watched the effects of labour-saving machinery of every kind upon society, knew that such ideas, when uttered, were no better than the emenations of an idiot's dream, trusted to a few years' experience to prove the benefits of such machines to every class in the community. Thousands of such machines are now in operation in our country; and if we are rightly informed, more than a thousand of them are in operation in New York city alone; but instead of these having thrown any industrious females out of employment, they have rather increased the quantity of work for them to do. We were told a few days since, by one engaged somewhat extensively in providing needle-work, that twenty stitches are now made on some garments, for one that was made five years ago—in short, that sewing machines had greatly increased the demand for sewed work. Thus coat-linings, which used to be made plain, are now most elaborately worked, and finely stitched, and it is the same with almost every kind of sewed work. The amount of such work, be stated, had increased even to a greater ratio than the machines to execute it. A higher taste is now being gratified, and hundreds of women who used to ply the needle early and late with their fingers, for a mere pittance, are now better remunerated for their labour in attending to sewing machines, while, at the same time, their hours of toil have been measurably reduced. It is our opinion that the very class—needle-women—respecting whom so much was at one time said about being injured by sewing machines, will be most benefited. In many, if not in almost every instance, this has been felt to be the case already. Sewing machines, therefore, which are but a recent invention, afforded abundant example "how machinery increases beneficial labor."—Scientific American.

LAUNCH OF A STEAMER,—The steamship New York, building for Cornelius Vanderbilt, was launched at New York on Monday, 10th inst. This vessel is of 5,000 tons burden, and is the largest ever constructed on this continent, though the Adriatic, now building for the Collins line, is nearly of the same tonnage. The keel of the New York was laid in April. She will ply between New York and Havre.—Phrenological Journal.

TELEGRAPHIC PROGRESS.—It is but eleven years since the first telegraph line, of 40 miles in length, of Professor Morse, was built, and now there are no less than 30,000 miles of telegraph wire on our continent. In Europe, lines of telegraph have been constructed to an extent rivalling those in America. The electric wire extends under the sea of the English Channel, the German Ocean and the Mediterranean. They pass from crag to crag on the Alps, and run through Italy, Switzerland, France, Germany and Russia. They may yet extend through the Atlantic Ocean.—Standard.

☞ The total number of arrivals at Quebec last year, was 21,273, against 43,183 in the previous year. These were 6,754 from England, 4,859 from Scotland, 4,106 from Ireland; from the continent of Europe, 4,864, and from the lower ports, 691.

PROPERTY OF THE FRENCH EMPEROR FROZEN IN.—It is stated that one hundred and fifty-nine canal boats, loaded with flour and grain, consigned to Louis Napoleon, are frozen in between Schenectady and Little Falls, New York, The amount of grain cannot be worth less than $1,000,000, and ten freight cars a day are employed to carry it to the tide water. They are engaged with difficulty, as the amount of freight business on the Central Road is enormous.

☞ The war budget of the Kingdom o Sardinia, just presented to the Piedmontese Chambers, fixes the expenses of the Eastern War during 1855 and 1856 at £74,539,532, including £11,376,401 for the navy.

MORE FILLIBUSTERING.—A party of fillibusters, destined to join Walker in Nicaragua, is said to be organizing in Bergen, N. J., and to have already gained considerable strength. This party is expected to leave Bergen, in a coasting vessel, with their outfit and munitions, and be put on board a steamer in the lower bay of New York.

WONDERFUL INVENTION FOR STOPPING LOCOMOTIVES ON RAILROADS BY ELECTRICITY.—The Paris correspondent of the New York Times, states that there is a great talk about a new and wonderful invention, put to test on the Madrid Railroad lately, for bringing up locomotives all standing without the intervention of anybody else, except a brother locomotive coming on the track in front. It is said to be done by some safeguard against the possibility of collision in future, two locomotives infallibly stopping one another before coming together.

NOTHING LIKE LEATHER.
IF YOU WOULD BE RICH,
Read this, and save your Penny.

GOOD morrow, friend---I'm a stranger in your borough, can you inform me where I can get a pair of good boots made?"

"Yes, sir, I can; just go to T. W. WILSON'S, King St. East, Chatham, next to Smith's Grocery; that's the place; he'll accommodate you most satisfactorily."

"Well, how is your judgment in regard to the quality of boots and shoes?"

"Most excellent—I'm an old boot and shoe maker; many are the days that I've drawn the cords."

"Where did you say I could find him?"

"Why, the next door to Mr. Andrew Smith's Grocery, corner of King and William Streets, East,—any person can tell you."

"Will you conduct me there?"

"I will with pleasure; for I know him to be, from experience, one of the best manufacturers of BOOTS AND SHOES in town. His stock is of his own manufacture, and he has always on hand a superior quality for gentlemen's wear. He's also very particular in getting up his work; so I'm confident he can't fail to give reasonable satisfaction to those who favor him with their patronage."

"There are some boot makers whose work is beautiful to the eye, but plagay pinching to the feet; and I have lumps upon each instep, which in foul weather give me excruciating pain."

"Ah, yes, too much have I suffered by fetters from the boot moulders hands; but he's not one of them; he endeavours to make a systematic fit, measuring from joint to heel, and from lump to toe—closely observing the most minute protuberance, if there be any upon the feet; and he seldom fails to make his boots set as easy thereon as a glove upon a lady's tender finger. Besides, he always keeps a superior stock on hand; perhaps you might obtain a pair upon the instant, that would fit your feet and please the eye."

"Then I must try him."

"Try him, of course, and you'll save at each end of your bargain. First—you'll buy cheaper—secondly, your boots will wear you longer."

"Come, let's go."

"I'm ready—Are you a cash man?"

"I am; for he who pays cash clips the discount of credit, and secures it in his own pocket."

"Then that's the place, for his motto reads"—

Ask of me no trust, when you come to buy;
Ask of me no trust, for you I must deny;
Ask of me no trust, it hath destroyed many;
Ask of me no trust, I cannot grant you any;
Ask of me no trust, but with your cash rally;
Ask of me no trust, nor with my pocket dally.

PATRICK'S WARDROBE.—At a sale which took place in a country town, among the lookers on were a few Irish laborers, and upon a trunk being put up for sale one of them said to his neighbour:

"Pat, I think you should buy that trunk."

"An' what should I do with it?" replied Pat, with some degree of astonishment.

"Why put your clothes in it," was the adviser's reply.

Pat gazed on him with a look of surprise, and then with that laconic eloquence which is peculiar to the sons of the Emerald Isle, exclaimed, "an go naked!"

BOXING THE COMPASS.—"Pat," said the captain of the schooner Anna Maria Matilda, "can you box the compass."

"Oh, be jabers, yis," replied the raw recruit from the Emerald Isle.

"Well, go at it then," replied the captain, who, at that moment was called to another part of the vessel. Half an hour afterward the captain found the compass was missing.

"Pat! here, you lubber-heard, where's the compass?"

"Faith, it's in the howld, sir."

"What in thunder is it doing there?" roared the infuriated officer.

"Why, didn't yer honor tell me to box the compass—an' didn't I mind yees? I packed it away, sir, in wan of thim empty boxes of soap, nailed it up tight, and put it in the howld. I boxed it all safe, sir."

A deacon who became rich in a grocery, used to boast how much he had done for the cause of temperance, by mixing one gallon of pure water with every gallon of liquor he sold.

POPPING THE QUESTION.—An editor who is a bachelor, of our acquaintance, having said in his last issue, that he really wished he had a son so that he could dress him up in the tasteful fashions of a tailor whom he was puffing, was called upon the next day by his adorable, to whom he had been paying attentions for the last two years, and asked if he really said that. "Certainly I did my dear." "Well, Willy," said his adorable, "why dont you make arrangements for one?" Our friend says that it was the first time he was ever concerned; he felt so mortified that he went right away to the parson.—Evansville Journal.

Perils of Teaching Grammar.

Mr. Editor,—I have been sendin' my darter Nancy to school to a schoolmaster in his naborhood. Last Friday I went over to tha school, just to see how Nancy was kittin along, and I see's things I didn't like by no means. The schoolmaster was larnin her things entirely out of the line of eddication, and, as I think, improper. I set awhile, in the school house, and heerd one class say there lesson. She said it very spry. I was shockt! and determined she should leave that school. I have heerd that gramer was an uncommon fine study, but I don't want any more gramer about my house. The lesson that Nancy said, was nothin' but the foolishest kind uv talk, the ridiculus luv talk you ever seed. She got up, and the fust word she said was, "I love!" I looked right at her hard for doing so improper, but she went ite on and said: "Thou lovest, he loves," and I reckon you never heerd sich a riggerpyrole in your life—love, love, love, and nothing but love. She said one time, "I did love."

Sez I, "Who did you love?" Then the scholars laffed, but I wasn't to be put off, and sed, "Who did you love, Nancy? I want to know, who did you love?" The schoolmaster, Mr. McQuillister, put in and he said he would explain when Nancy finished the lesson. This sorter pacified me, and Nancy went on with awful love talk. It got wus and wus, every word. She sed—"I might, could or would love."

I stopped her again, and sed, I reckon I would see about that, and told her to walk out of the house. The schoolmaster tried to interfere, but I wouldn't let him say a word He said I was a fool, and I nockt him down, and make him holler in short order. I taukt the strate thing to him. I told him I'd show him how he'd larn my darter gramer.

I got the nabers together, and we sent Mr. McQuillister off in a hurry, and I reckon tharl be no more gramer teechin' in these parts soon. If you know of any rather oldish man in your reegen that doant teech gramer, we wood be glad if you wood send him up. But in the footure we will be keerful how we employ men. Yung schoolmasters won't do, especially if they teeches gramer. It is a bad thing for morils.

Yours till deth,

STOP THAT BOY.—A cigar is in his mouth, a swagger in his walk, impudence in his face, a care-for-nothingness in his manner. Judging from his demeanor he is older than his father, wiser than his teacher, more honored than the mayor of the town, higher than the lord chancellor. Stop him; he is going too fast. He don't see himself as others see him. He don't know his speed. Stop him ere tobacco shatter his nerves, ere prize rum his character; ere the lounger master the man; ere good ambition and manly strength give way to low pursuits and brutish aims. Stop all such boys! They are legion—the shame of their families, the disgrace of their towns, the sad and solemn reproaches of themselves.

RECIPES, &c.

TO MAKE GROUNDNUT CANDY.—Boil together one pint of molasses, one gill of brown sugar, and two ounces of butter. When this is growing thick, add one pint of parched and shelled groundnuts; then boil the whole fifteen minutes, and pour it into a shallow dish to cool and harden.

TO EXTRACT GREASE FROM CLOTH.—The following is said to be infallible: To sixteen ounces of rectified spirits of wine, add ten grains of carbonate of potash, (pure) half an ounce of essential oil of bergamot, and one ounce of sulphuric ether; mix and keep in a glass-stoppered bottle. Apply with a piece of sponge, soaking the cloth thoroughly when the grease is not recent. The mixture emits a peculiarly fragrant odor, and being a fluid soup, chemically composed, will be found a perfect solvent of oily matter.

TO KEEP A STOVE BRIGHT.—Make a weak alum water, and mix your "British Lustre" with it; put two spoonfuls to a gill of alum water, let the stove be cold, brush it with the mixture, then take a dry brush and lustre and rub the stove till it is dry. Should any parts, before polishing, become dry as to look gray, moisten it with a wet brush, and proceed as before. By two applications a year, it can be kept as bright as a coach body.

TO CURE FELONS.—Within the past year we have known the spinal marrow of an ox or cow applied by three different persons, with the most satisfactory results, in relieving the pain and securing speedy cures of their felons. This we are sure will be useful information to many. The spinal marrow should be applied fresh every four hours for two days.—Scientific American.

TO MAKE INDIAN PUDDING.—"Real Ginevene Yankee Pudden."—Take three pints of scalded milk, add as much fine (yellow) Indian meal as will be sufficient to make a stiff batter, and a teacupful of molasses, with salt to your tate. Boil it four hours, or even longer, for boiling does not hurt, but improves it. A few ripe cherries or whortleberries will also improve it. Many think a small portion of suet (beef's) chopped fine, without the fruit, a good and even better addition. It is to be eaten with butter and molasses, of course.

This fine desert of Revolutionary memory should occasionally have a place on every man's table. Down East it often comes to hand. Out West it is quite too rarely found. —Dr. Awl, in Ohio Farmer,

BAKED INDIAN PUDDING.—Take 3 pints of scalded milk, one handful of wheat flour, three eggs and as much Indian meal as will make the whole thick, like batter for pancakes. Add one gill of molasses, and salt to your taste. Bake three hours—Dr. Awl, in Ohio Farmer.

Miscellaneous.

Wearing Flannel.

Put it on at once; winter or summer, nothing better can be worn next the skin than a loose, red, woolen, flannel shirt; "loose," for it has room to move on the skin, thus causing a titillation which draws the blood to the surface and keeps it there; and when that is the case no one can take a cold; "red," for white flannel fulls up, mats together, and becomes light, stiff, heavy and, impervious. Cotton wool merely absorbs the moisture from the surface; while woolen flannel conveys it from the skin and deposits it in drops on the outside of the shirt, from which the ordinary cotton shirt absorbs it; and by its nearer exposure to the exterior air, it is soon dried without injury to the body. Having these properties, red woolen flannel is worn by sailors even in the mid-summer of the hottest countries. Wear a thinner material in summer.—Hall's Journal of Health.

The above is good advice; but most persons we suppose, would prefer to wear white in preference to red flannel, were it possible to prevent it fulling up. Red flannel discharges its color by perspiration; this is an evil which does not belong to white flannel. Red flannel soon looses its bright appearance, and becomes a dull, dirty-looking crimson; this is also caused by the perspiration. White flannel, when washed, always looks clean. Old red flannel cannot be made to look clean by all the waters of Lake Ontario: white flannel, therefore, has much to recommend it over red, and for under-shirts nothing else should be worn. It can also be prevented from fulling up, as well as red flannel. What property does the latter flannel possess over the former that prevents it from fulling up by frequent washing? It is made of the same materials, consequently the cause cannot be in any difference in the quality of the wool. Red flannel, however, undergoes boiling for about an hour in the act of coloring, and this alone, we conceive, is the cause why it does not full up so readily as the white. Let white flannel be boiled in clean soft water for an hour, then dried before it is made up into shirts, and it will be found no more liable to full (thicken) than red flannel.

Good News for the Ladies.

The last report of the French fashions, communicated to a New York Journal, describes an invention by which a crenoline petticoat can be converted into a balloon, the garment being swelled out or reduced to its natural volume, according to the will of the wearer.

"A small ingenious brass or caoutchouc machine is attached to the petticoat; this little piece of mechanism is furnished with a sous pipe and piston. If you wish to be seated in a carriage or a box at the theatre, you open the sous pipe and the air disperses with a shrill sound after the fashion of an engine whistle, leaving your dimensions such as will enable you to occupy a moderate space. But if you intend to spread yourself on the Champ Elyses, or to enter a ball-room where hoops and trains reign triumphant, you press the piston, the air fills the tissure, and the crenoline swells out most majestically. It is very curious to witness the ladies, when entering places of public resort with the piston attachment, the shrill sound of the escaping gas has a most curious effect on those who are unused to the improvement, but like everything else, this will be thought nothing of when people get used to it. With the present style of dress it is nearly impossible for two ladies in full toilet to occupy the same carriage."

How to tell a Counterfeit Bank Note.

Mr. Dye, the editor of the Bank Note Detector, lectured at the Tabernacle recently, on Counterfeiters and their Tricks, illustrating his subject by a panorama display of bank notes on an enlarged scale. Some of his remarks will be useful to our readers.

Mr. Dye said that his object in these lectures was to explain the mode of detecting all classes of bad bills. The idea of describing counterfeit notes originally with a count letter in Philadelphia, and it has ever since been turned to the advantage of this class of rogues.

There had been a suggestion, he said, that bank note engravers were the makers of counterfeit money. But this is not so. There never was but one engraver who turned counterfeiter. The counterfeiters are not so numerous now as for merly. On account of the great difficulty they have to contend with in the excellent workmanship of genuine bills, they have turned their attention to making small changes, and altered bills. For these they can use one plate for all denominations of bills of every bank in America. This is done by erasing the title of the bank and names of the state or town and leaving a blank in the places of the figures and letters.

The true way to detect a counterfeit is not always by the signatures, but by the workmanship, which is generally coarse and rough. When a man takes a bill in his hand he should look at every part of it, particularly at the imprint of the engravers. It is well to look at the letters, to see that they are well formed. Most counterfeits can be detected by a moment's glance.

The panorama now moved, and a canvas ten by fourteen feet was exhibited, a fac-simile of a genuine five-dollar bill of the Ocean Bank. Mr. Dye pointed out the beauties of the workmanship of the note, and said that by the shading of the letters in a new line across out of a hundred a person could tell a good bill from a bad one. A counterfeit five on the Ocean Bank was also exhibited on the panorama, as the difference could be easily seen even by an unpracticed eye.

The lecturer then explained the manner in which counterfeiters make plates and bills. The last new mode is to transfer by means of white wax. By this process the figures of the engraver's work is soon to be imperfect. Counterfeiters are generally satisfied in any one place the general figures of a bill.

The most counterfeit bill that was ever made was a fifty on the State Bank of Missouri. But it was imperfect in the shading, and was detected. A counterfeit note is the hardest thing in the world to make because it must be made perfect.

A counterfeit bill on the Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank of Hartford, a city not far from Pontiac, Michigan, was next shown in the panorama. It was one of the finest counterfeits ever issued. It was a note of a Rhode Island bank, but the plate had been changed somewhat, and was engraved by Rawdon, Wright & Hatch, of New York.

The next counterfeit was a five on the Weybosset Bank, of Providence, Rhode Island. It was a Michigan bill, with the title of a Rhode Island bank inserted. By looking close at the shading around the lettering, it appeared broken, but the lettering is complete on the bill, except that the second letter is left out.

The most curious note of all, a spurious note, was next exhibited. It was issued on the Mercantile Bank, Salem, Mass. Where counterfeiters get hold of genuine notes, they might counterfeit every bank in North America, without altering the title.

The lecturer said that some years ago, a certain person got a plate engraved in New York for the Planters Bank of Alabama. He brought good recommendations, and as it was customary in those days to allow the banks to carry away the plates, the customer obtain a possession of the plate. He went to Lexington, Kentucky, and there joined a gang of counterfeiters. As there was no Planters Bank of Alabama, they went to St. Louis, had Alabama beaten out of the plate and Tennessee inserted. It then read "Planters' Bank of Tennessee," and thousands of dollars were made and circulated by the villians.

Mr. Dye related some of the tricks of the fraternity to circulate their vile trash. A counterfeiter was riding along the road with a farmer, and knowing that the latter had about two dollars and a half in good gold, contrived a plan to get it from him. He took from his pocket a counterfeit five, and dropped it in the road. Stopping his horse suddenly, the counterfeiter told the farmer he saw a five-dollar bill on the ground. He got off his horse, picked up the bill, and generously offered to divide the prize. The farmer gave him his gold, and received the counterfeit bill in exchange, with many thanks to the liberal stranger.

The panorama next exhibited a fifty on the Providence Bank, Providence, Rhode Island. It is what is termed a raised bill. The bill is genuine in every particular except the denomination, which was altered from one to fifty. The counterfeiters put it in and this work such a polite and pen. It is important to detect these cases of this kind, as the laborers and toilers, to some extent, have been imposed.

Another bill represented on the canvas was a twenty on the Manufacturers' Bank, Ware, Mass. It was an excellent bill, and the engraving, where the word twenty occurs, has been executed by a chemical process and the paper was left almost as white as it was originally. It can be easily detected by holding it to the light. This was a capital bill. The "one" has been scraped off and "twenty" printed in its place, leaving a whitish appearance around the letters. It can be detected by roughness all over the face.

Mr. Dye said it was folly to think of preventing counterfeits by having the bills read on the back. He thought that was but an assistance to them.

In the course of his remarks, Mr. Dye alluded to the great improvements which had been made by bank note engravers in the perfection of their work, which now ranks still of the most ingenious contrivances in Life Illustrated.

GREAT NAVAL PREPARATIONS.—England is making the most gigantic preparations for the coming campaign, especially by sea. Twenty-ships-of-the-line and 18 frigates, of the magnificent proportions and heavy armament with which those formidable vessels are now fitted, are followed by a line of floating batteries, heavy mortar-ships, and gun-boats of smaller dimensions, amounting in all to 243. This, with what she already has, is said to be the largest naval armament that ever floated at one time.

A Romance of Real Life.

Some years ago, a banker, supposed to be wealthy, resided in a well-known borough town of considerable magnitude in the west of England. The bank, however, failed, and the banker died, leaving behind him a lovely and highly-accomplished young lady, his daughter, penniless. She at one time took to the stage, and possessing a charming voice, a beautiful person, together with considerable talent, she was very successful In or near the same town there resided, at the same time, a worthy gentleman upwards of 60 years, unmarried, but having three daughters by his deceased wife. He engaged the banker's daughters as a companion for them; but he himself became so enamoured of the banker's daughter, that he ultimately married her. Afterwards they went abroad, and resided for some time in a town on the coast of Spain; but ultimately he returned to England, and bought a villa on the banks of the Thames. While residing there, a young clergyman of the Church of England, belonging to the low church or evangelical party, was a frequent visitor to the house, and accompanied them on visits or excursions. One day, while sailing on the Thames, the boat or yacht was upset. The old gentleman caught his young wife in his arms, and sustained her in the water as long as possible, calling out to the young clergyman to swim towards them and "save her!" and he then sank to rise no more; but the clergyman had reached the lady, and making desperate efforts he saved her from a watery grave. Some months afterwards she gratefully presented the preserver of her life with her hand, and an income left to her by her first husband or £2000 a-year. Subsequently they came and resided in a small town on the sea coast, not a thousand miles from Brighton. Here he was rector of the parish, and built a noble parsonage house, at a cost of £5000, on glebe land, where he resided. He had, at the instance, it is said, of his wife, abandoned the low church for the high church party, and gave great offence to some of the old parishioners by the changes he introduced, being what is termed a "Puseyite," or "Tractarian;" but within the last few days this gentleman has embraced the tenets of the Roman Catholic Church, and recanted, it is said, what he now considers the errors of Protestanism. He ceases, of course, to be a clergyman of the Church of England. All his effects at the parsonage house are to be sold; and he loses, we believe, all interest in the parsonage house; and he and his family, it is said, are about so proceed to Italy. As a married man, he cannot be a priest in the Catholic Church, and therefore cannot administer at the altar; but we believe that in some similar cases converts have been permitted to preach, and that may be all he may desire. This "conversion," or, as some will term it, "perversion," has made as great a sensation in the church as did the conversion of Archdeacon Manning, who is the intimate friend of the gentleman we have been speaking of, and who, as it is said, was instrumental in his "conversion."—Brighton Examiner.

Bold Roguery.

An incident came to hand yesterday, displaying a coolness and sagacity of roguery which outdoes anything of the kind we ever heard of in St. Louis.

Monsieur Maurice Dejamer, lately arrived in our city, on New Year's Day was passing along Fourth St., when he met a friend, and invited him to come to his hotel and take dinner at his room. During the conversation, the house and number of the room were all given, and all heard by a third party, who happened to be standing by, and who, as it turned out, was a scoundrel of the deepest dye.

This third party, doubtless on the lookout for a chance, caught an idea at once, and hastening to the hotel in advance of the Frenchman and his guest, represented to the landlord that he was the newly employed servant of Monsieur, and that his governor would soon be along to order dinner in his room.

The Frenchman and friend came and ordered dinner. The servant that waited on them was the same individual that heard their conversation on the pavement. The landlord thought of course Monsieur would prefer his own domestic; and the Monsieur was highly pleased indeed, that the landlord should provide him with such an attentive servant.

The dinner was eaten with relish and wine and jovial conversation flowed freely between host and guest.

Suddenly, as the servant was removing the dishes he accidentally stumbled, and the contents of one of the last consumed dishes was spilled upon Monsieur's coat. The confusion was great, as may be supposed, and the owner of the coat let off a mingled French and English execrations at the stupidity and awkwardness of the servant; who was very humble in his apologies, and assured Monsieur that if he would just take off the coat and let him take it down stairs, he would bring it back presently as good as before, without stain or blemish.

The owner parted with his coat, and at the same time (which he did not find out until afterward) parted forever with a roll of money in one of the coat pockets, and one or two other articles of value.

The servant had decamped. The Frenchman had been robbed. The landlord was dismayed. Everybody swore sacre.—St. Louis Democrat.

AN OLD ONE.—A correspondent of the Richmond Enquirer, says there is living in Powhatan County, Va., a person who was born 48 years before the Declaration of American Independence, and 4 or 5 years before the birth of Washington.

The boot and shoe trade of Cincinnati amounts to $4,000,000 yearly.

The Slave Rescue at Antigua—Another Version of the Story.

We have files of Bermuda papers to the 1st inst. The Royal Gazette of that date gives the following account of the rescue of the colored seaman Ross by the British authorities, from the brig Loango, to which we have on more than one occasion adverted. The Gazette says:

"We have now reason to know that the statement made in our last Gazette to the effect that the colored man taken from the American brig Loango, by the authorities at Antigua, was a freeman was incorrect. He was a slave, and as such was under restraint on board the Loango. When the properly authorized persons went on board that vessel, the crew was mustered by the mate in absence of the Captain, and Ross stated himself to be a slave and claimed freedom and protection. After he was taken on shore, he repeated what he had before stated, and is now at liberty in that Island, to do as he pleases, like any other freeman. He declares he will never leave Antigua. Capt. Fairfax had been shown the statement which appeared in the New York Herald on the 2d ult., relative to Ross by the United States Consul at the Island of St. Thomas; and without any instructions proceeded at once to Antigua and assumed the hostile position as noticed in our last publication.

"Governor Hamilton and Captain Pearse, of the Medea, did all they could to explain and conciliate, and the latter officer courteously went on board the Cyane himself, but met with a similar reception to that of his Lieutenant—Captain F. would not salute the British flag, as he considered his own flag insulted; and this high position he continued to hold throughout.

"It is considered a providential circumstance that the Medea was at Antigua at the time of the arrival there of the Cyane, as, judging from the excited state of the colored population, and the offensive position assumed by Capt. Fairfax, there is every reason to apprehend that some serious collision would have taken place."

Fresh Arrival of Fugitives.

We had the pleasure of seeing seven very intelligent, fine-appearing fugitives, this morning, fresh from the land of the "Peculiar Institution," the blessings of which they seemed not at all to appreciate. Two of them, a young, married couple, left in October last, and has just arrived, having been delayed by sickness and the dangers of their wearisome journey. One was from Delaware; the other from the same neighbourhood. This party when it left, consisted of four males and two females, all young people. They came on in good order, for a time in carriages, without opposition; but before reaching the borders of the free States, they were attacked by a party of six whites. They took their horses from the carriages, and mounted them; two of the men taking each a female behind him, and the other two going singly. Those with the females escaped, but the men who were alone were probably captured, as they have not been heard from. The seven arrived at Loguen's last night, where they were cared for, and are probably now on their way for the Land of the Free. Two of them were married to-day.—Syracuse Chron. 19th inst.

The Owner of a Thousand Slaves.

The richest member of the present Congress is Wm. Aiken, of South Carolina. His property is valued at $2,000,000, including over one thousand negroes! What a commentary on Republican institutions! The largest owner of slaves in the country occupies a seat in Congress, and makes laws for freemen. It is such glaring inconsistencies as this that make Europeans mock at our Republican Government. They cannot see how supporters of the vilest slavery in the world can be honest in their "patriotic" speeches for Freedom and Equality.—Woonsocket Patriot.

WHITE SLAVES.—The Savannah Republican, printed in the Democratic State of Georgia, which boasts a Toombs, who says he will yet call the roll of his slaves at the foot of Bunker Hill monument, has, in its impression of the 15th ult., the following advertisement:

$50 REWARD.—RUNAWAY from the subscriber, on the 22nd ult., my Negro man ALBERT, who is 27 years of age very white, so much so that he will not be suspected of being a negro. Has brown eyes and very light hair. Wore, when he left, a long, thin beard, and rode a common chestnut sorrel horse, with about $70 belonging to him. It.

He is about 5 feet 8 inches high, weighs about 150 lbs., has a humble and meek appearance, can neither read nor write, and is a kind and amiable fellow, speaks much like a low country negro. He has, no doubt, been led off by some miserable wretch, during my absence to New York.

The above Reward will be paid for his delivery in jail to Tison & Murray, Savannah, or I will give one to Tison & Murray, Savannah, or I will give one half if I can get him. J. M. TISON.
Bethel, Glynn Co., Georgia.

$50 REWARD.—Ran away from the subscriber, on Difficult Run, near Geo. W. Hunter's Mill, Fairfax County, Va., on Sunday, the 9th inst., a NEGRO WOMAN, having with her a CHILD SIX MONTHS OF AGE, NEARLY WHITE. The said woman is delicately made, of a copper colour, is about five feet two inches in height, and is supposed to be in the neighbourhood of Georgetown, D. C. The above reward will be given if taken in Georgetown or Washington, or the adjoining counties, and secured so that I can get her again.

A WOMAN HANGED.—A colored woman, named Celia, was hanged on the 21st ult., at Fulton, Me., for the murder of Robert Newsome, whose slave she was in June last. The evening preceding her execution she made a full confession of her crime.

Humor and Wit.

☞ A joke was played in Toledo, Ohio, by the telegraph reporters, on Saturday, in sending to the hotels and depots about town, to inquire for a trunk marked "L. E. Fant." After a close search by the baggage masters clerks, &c., all came to the conclusion that the Elephant always takes his trunk with him.

☞ To what eye is everything invisible? —To the eye of a potato!

"To him who in the earth doth abide:
Yet thousands are toiling in poisonous gloom,
And shackled with iron bands,—
While millions of hands want acres—
And millions of acres want hands!

Never a foot hath the poor man here,
To plant with a grain of corn;
And never a plot where his child may cull
Fresh flowers in the dewy morn.
The soil lies fallow—the woods grow rank;
Yet idle the poor man stands!
Oh! millions of hands want acres—
And millions of acres want hands!

'Tis writ, that "we shall not muzzle the ox
That treadeth out the corn!"
But Behold! ye shackle the poor man's hands
That have all earth's burdens borne!
The land is the gift of a bounteous God—
And to labor His word commands,—
Yet millions of hands want acres—
And millions of acres want hands!

Who hath ordained the Few should hoard
Their millions of useless gold?
And rob the earth of its fruits and flowers,
While profitless soil they hold?
Who hath ordained that a parchment scroll
Shall fence round miles of lands,—
When millions of hands wants acres—
And millions of acres want hands!

'Tis a glaring lie on the face of day—
This robbery of men's rights!
'Tis a lie, that the word of the Lord disowns—
'Tis a curse that burns and blights!
And 'twill burn and blight till the people rise,
And swear, while they break their band—
That the hands shall henceforth have acres
And the acres henceforth have hands!

From the Louisville Courier.

An Abolitionist Tarred and Feathered.

The citizens of Lexington were very much incensed on Friday last, upon reading an article published in the Statesman, copied from a paper in Oxford, Ohio. It purported to have been written in Lexington, and gave an account of Christmas day in that city, with many violent and false comments upon the institution of slavery in Kentucky. The letter was signed J. B. [illegible] (understood, of a person by that name) who had been for some time employed as a teacher in one of the city schools.

Feeling that this man, who had been received and hospitably entertained, was guilty of a great wrong in thus calumniating the people and institutions of that section, after night a party of almost two hundred repaired to his lodgings. He was informed of the mission of the company, and, though fearful of the chill night air, could not hesitate accompanying the party. He was conducted to the court-house yard, and there stripped.

A large quantity of pitch had been prepared for the occasion, with the contents of several bags of feathers. The clothing was speedily removed from the body of Brady, and the pitch applied to the thickness of an inch. Then the feathers were nicely planted, and Brady's head shaved close to the scalp, save two locks, near the forehead. He was then set loose, and charged to go and sin no more. More severe punishment (it would have been administered had it not been for the wife of Brady, a beautiful and estimable lady.

Brady applied to a physician to remove the tar, but it was found utterly impossible. He left on the morning train for Covington and the land of Black Republicans.

From the Lexington Observer.

Lynching.

On Friday night last, a party of men repaired to the residence of Mr. Simeon N. Drake, of this city, and called for Mr. John Brady, who was boarding at the house. Upon his appearance at the door they seized and gaged him, and then, sans ceremonie, proceeded to shave his head and to administer a coat of tar and varnish to his face.

The reason for this summary affair is as follows: Mr. Brady, who is, or rather was, the principal of one of our city schools, wrote a letter, a short time ago, to a paper published in Oxford, Ohio, calumnious in its character, and filled with unwarranted and coarse allusions to some of our most esteemed citizens. It related to the institution of slavery, as it exists in this community, and some of the suggestions with it contains are as unique and original as any we have yet seen from the pen of an Abolitionist.

Mr. Brady was not content with denouncing the community in general terms for countenancing slavery, but he saw proper to advise Mr. Bentley, the worthy Rector of the Episcopal Church, to convert his church into a slavery mart, [illegible] occasionally for the edification of his congregation. He also denounced others in our midst, although he did not name them personally, and upon the publication of his letter in the Kentucky Statesman, great indignation spread throughout the city, and it resulted in the speedy punishment of its author.

We are no especial admirer of the doctrines taught in the school of Judge Lynch, but the action of those who engaged in this matter cannot be condemned. The letter of Mr. Brady is outrageous in his tone and character, and any one who could allow himself to [illegible] and to insult them, deserved an ignominious expulsion from our midst. This man had been a recipient of public favour and confidence. He had been chosen over residents of Kentucky to a salary of $1,000 per annum [illegible] for this kindness he returned denunciation and abuse of our [illegible] uncalled for attacks upon [illegible] respected fellow-townsmen.

The people of [illegible] and generally take into their confidence those [illegible] other states, [illegible] their brother negro-thieves of the North.

It is proper to add [illegible] Committee [illegible] on Saturday morning that he wrote [illegible] him.

It is not long since Mr. Butler, a Northern gentleman of great worth, for punishing a pupil—a refractory son of a slaveholder—was cruelly murdered in his school-room, in Louisville, by the pupil's elder brother. The murderer was tried and acquitted, though no one doubted or pretended to deny that he committed the deed. And now, another Northern school-master has been ignominiously tarred and feathered by, or with the connivance of, the whole population of Lexington, simply for daring to utter his honest sentiments in relation to slavery.

Thus do the slaveholding [illegible] themselves against the liberty of speech and the press and by the terrors of Lynch law seek to enforce silence upon all who witness the cruelties they inflict upon their victims. The instigators of such outrages, or those who connive at them, are made welcome to Northern pulpits and communion-tables.

Since the above was in type, we have been furnished with that portion of Mr. Brady's letter which was deemed offensive by the people of Lexington, and, as we anticipated, we find that it is creditable to him both in spirit and language. After describing a Christmas sermon, Mr. Brady, writing to his friend in Oxford, Ohio, proceeded as follows:

Curiosity at beholding a crowd so much denser than at the church, attracted my attention, and led me to halt a moment, when lo! there came to my ears the hoarse notes of an auctioneer, selling a human feature, a human being, to the highest bidder.

Never were my feelings so much shocked. Though I had before witnessed the horrid spectacle of the sale of a human being, yet, upon this day, commemorative of such an event as can never be known again upon earth—the birth of the immaculate and only son of God—and after such a discourse as that to which we had just listened to witness a deed so revolting at any time to the feelings of any one in the least degree imbued with Christian philanthropy, and so contradictory of every precept of Him for whom the day had been named, it was really shocking beyond description, and to hear the auctioneer crying with stentorian voice, "only $1,285," is but for this boy, "a fine lively nigger going for $1,285," must be sold to the highest bidder." It disgusted, and shocked me beyond measure. It was enough to make one ashamed that he belonged to a race of beings that could so prey upon their species.

Oh, what a contrast was this scene, almost at the door of the church, to what we might have expected of that community of which we had just heard a favorable account. If this scene was [illegible] and that such scenes [illegible] view when speculation [illegible] terms of the community (as he must [illegible] wondered, as the hour suited, that they did not make the sale at the church after the sermon, and before the benediction, the minister being auctioneer. Perhaps however, they knew that they could not get such a crowd there as they wanted, and, therefore, they came to the way leading up to the Temple of Justice (so called).

Oh! how I wished for a Paul to stand up before them, at the entrance of this temple, and [illegible] frightfulness, [illegible] Lord [illegible] reason [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

NOTHING LIKE LEATHER.

IF YOU WOULD BE RICH,

Read this, and save your Penny.

GOOD morrow, friend—I'm a stranger in your borough, can you inform me where I can get a pair of good boots made?"

"Yes, sir, I can just go to T. W. WILSONS King St. East, Chatham, next to Smith's Grocery, that's the place; he'll accommodate you most assuredly."

"Well, how is your judgment in regard to the quality of boots and shoes?"

"Most excellent—I'm an old boot and shoe maker; many are the days that I've drawn the cords."

"Where did you say I could find him?"

"Why, the next door to Mr. Andrew Smith's Grocery, corner of King and William Streets, East,—any person can tell you."

"Will you conduct me there?"

"I will with pleasure; for I know him to be, from experience, one of the best manufacturers of BOOTS AND SHOES in town. His stock is of his own manufacture, and he has always on hand a superior quality for gentlemen's wear. He's also very particular in getting up his work; so I'm confident he can't fail to give reasonable satisfaction to those who favor him with their patronage."

"There are some boot makers whose work is beautiful to the eye, but plagny pinching to the feet; and I have lumps upon each instep, which in foul weather give me excruciating pain."

"Ah, yes, too much have I suffered by fetters from the boot moulders hands; but he's not one of them; he endeavours to make a systematic fit, measuring from joint to heel, and from lump to toe—closely observing the most minute protuberance, if there be any upon the feet; and he seldom fails to make his boots set as easy thereon as a glove upon a lady's tender finger. Besides, he always keeps a superior stock on hand; perhaps you might obtain a pair upon the instant, that would fit your feet and please the eye."

"Then I must try him."

"Try him, of course, and you'll save at each end of your bargain. First—you'll buy cheaper—secondly, your boots will wear you longer."

"Come, let's go."

"I'm ready—Are you a cash man?"

"I am; for he who pays cash clips the discount of credit, and secures it in his own pocket."

"Then that's the place, for his motto reads"—

Ask of me no trust, when you come to buy;
Ask of me no trust, for you I must deny;
Ask of me no trust, it hath destroyed many;
Ask of me no trust, I cannot grant you any;
Ask of me no trust, but with your cash rally;
Ask of me no trust, nor with my pocket dally.

FORGERY.

The Counterfeit Radway's Ready Relief in Canada.

THE LIVES OF THE PEOPLE IN DANGER.

THE public are cautioned against purchasing a counterfeit of Radway's Ready Relief, which is now circulating through the Canadas.—We are informed that parties at Hamilton, C.W. have been selling a spurious article of our Ready Relief, for the genuine to dealers. This is not only a fraud upon us, but is a most wicked imposition on the public. The wretch that will knowingly lend himself to so vile and treacherous a trick, for the gain of a few extra sixpences, is unsafe to deal with, and should be shunned by all respectable dealers, for if a few sixpences will induce him to rob the distressed sufferer of hope and health and to place the invalid's life in danger, he would not scruple to deceive his best customers.

Dealers who wish the genuine, purchase only of established credit, not of irresponsible pedlars or traveling adventurers and impostors.

Dealers who have R. R. R. offered to them below our regular price, may rely upon the same being a counterfeit preparation. We never sell R. R. R. in large quantities for less than 10 per cent. from our regular gross price. Dealers who purchase the counterfeit and offer the same for sale, render themselves liable to prosecution.

All of our travellers and authorized Agents have a power of Attorney signed by us, authorizing them in our name, to transact our business.

The following are our only Agents in Hamilton, C. W.: T. BICKLE & SON; HAMILTON, KNEESHAW & CO.; In Toronto, LYMAN, BROTHERS, & CO., are our general agents—we also sell to SIMPSON & CO.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1856.
THE
SATURDAY EVENING POST.

ESTABLISHED AUGUST 4TH, 1821.

Weekly Edition between 80,000 and 90,000

IN issuing their Prospectus for 1856, the proprietors of the Post take it for granted, that the public are already tolerably well acquainted with the character of a paper that has grown strong during the storms and sunshine of THIRTY-FOUR YEARS. Their object always has been as it remains to be, to publish a weekly paper for the family circle, which shall not only amuse, but also instruct and improve, those who may read it. To accomplish this object, the best articles are selected or condensed from foreign and domestic periodicals, and original articles of an instructive character, procured when possible.

Letters from Foreign Lands; the most interesting portions of the Weekly News of the World; Sketches of Life, Adventure and Character; Selected and Original Articles upon Agriculture; Account of the Produce and Stock Markets; and a Bank Note List are included among the solid information to be constantly found in the Post.

But the mind requires a wider range—it has faculties which delight in the humorous and lively the imaginative and poetical. These faculties also must have their appropriate food, else they become enfeebled, and, as a consequence, the intellect becomes narrow and one-sided, and is not able to take an enlarged and generous view of human nature and its destiny. To satisfy these Heaven-implanted cravings of our mental being, we devote a fair proportion of the Post to FICTION, POETRY, and HUMOR.

Among our contributors in the first two of the above departments, are several of the most gifted writers in the land. We also draw freely for Fiction and Poetry upon the best periodicals in this country and Great Britain. We design commencing a New Story by Mrs. SOUTHWORTH, author of "The Deserted Wife," "Miriam," &c. in our first paper for January next.

Engravings—illustrative of important places and actions, of Agricultural and other new Inventions, with others of a Humorous, though refined character, are also freely given.

The Postage on the Post to any part of the United States, paid quarterly or yearly in advance, at the office where it is received, is only 26 cents a year.

Terms.—The Terms of the Post are Two Dollars, if paid in advance; Three Dollars, if not paid in advance. For Five Dollars, in advance, one copy is sent three years. We continue the following low terms for Clubs, to be sent, in the city, to one address, and, in the country, to one Post Office.

4 Copies,	- - - -	per annum $ 5
8 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$10
13 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$15
20 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$20

Persons residing in British North America must remit twenty-five cents in addition to the subscription price, as we have to prepay the United States postage.

ADDITIONS TO CLUBS.—Any person having sent the money and names for a Club, may add new names to it at the same rate, provided the latter will allow their subscriptions to end at the same time those of the main list do. We will willingly supply the back numbers, if we have them. Our object is to have all the subscriptions in each Club end at the same time, and thus prevent confusion.

The money for Clubs must always be sent in advance. When the sum is large, a draft should be procured if possible—the cost of which may be deducted from the amount.

Post-Masters or others sending for Clubs, would confer a favor by having them sent to one address, when they can do so conveniently.

The papers to Clubs are invariably stopped at the expiration of the period for which they have subscribed.

A NEW ARRANGEMENT.—Our subscribers will take notice that we now have no collecting agents out of this State. They will therefore please remit to us direct.

All persons addressing letters to us should be careful to give the name of the State, as well as of the town, in which they live. All letters must be post-paid.

Subscribers wishing their paper changed, will please give the name of the Post-Office to be changed from, as well as the Post-Office they wish it hereafter sent to.

We trust that such of our old friends, the Post-Masters, as do not feel inclined to take advantage of our liberal offers themselves, will show our Prospectus to other influential and responsible persons who will be willing to raise Clubs, &c.

No. 66, South Third Street, Philadelphia.

☞ N.B.—Any Person desirous of receiving a copy of the POST, as a sample, can be accommodated by notifying the Publishers by letter, (post-paid).

A MORE "IMPORTANT NOTICE."

American Tract Society—Slavery.

THE Independent, of New York, in an article in that paper, of the 15th March, being one of a continuation of articles regarding the "American Tract Society," has this sentence:—"For thirty years, one of the greatest institutions of Evangelical Christendom, has been testifying in effect, that the institution of Slavery, the buying and selling of human beings, and the profession of the slave-trader, are less offensive to God, and contary to the Gospel, less perilous to the souls of men, than the practice of dancing. It has attempted, to exhibit and authenticate, on the widest scale, an administration of Christianity in which there shall be no more syllable of rebuke for crimes that shock the morals sense of Christendom. The influence of the Tract Society has tended to make the Southern churches more timid and cowed in the presence of the imperious slave-trading interest. As a consequence of this policy—partly, but not exclusively—behold the SOUTHERN APOSTACY!"

In December 1814, a report of "The Committee of the Synod of New York and New Jersey, on the subject of the publications of books by the American Tract Society" was published, and in that report, the mutilations and omissions in the editions published, by that Society of D'Aubigne's History of the Great Reformation, were pointed out—besides, there are the omissions and expurgations in other books published, as to the vile sin of Slavery, and the substitution of sentences other than the original.

The notice by me entitled, "Publications," preferable to these matters, has been widely circulated, and a Canadian public are again reminded of their duty.

Literature.

The Russian Slave.

[Translated from the New York Musical World.

It was the epoch of the Congress of Vienna, when the fate of half Europe was decided amidst pomps and festivities without a rival in modern history. Tournaments, carousals, masked balls, theatres and operas, horse-racing and gaming, regattas, illuminations, fire-works everything which the imagination could devise, was employed for the amusement of these 'things taking a holiday.' Amid the programme of festivities prepared by the Imperial Committee, there figured a stag-hunt, and the woods in the neighborhood of Schœnbrunn were gay with the crowd assembled to witness or participate in the sport. One person alone, elegantly dressed and mounted on a high-bred steed, took no part in the amusements of the day. His eyes were intently fixed on Sir James Railly, an Englishman, noted for his wealth, his eccentricities, and his passion for play; he followed him wherever he went, and seemed to wish to attract his attention.

'What does this mean?' said Sir James to himself, "Twice my eyes have encountered this young man, and he has made the same mysterious gesture. I cannot be deceived; it is intended for me;" and he turned his horse's head towards the stranger. The latter, seeing the movement, advanced to meet him.

'Sir,' said he, bowing low, 'I had the honor of meeting you before.'

'Yes,' replied the Englishman, who was vainly interrogating his memory: 'Yes, your face is a credit or which torments me, and which I cannot satisfy by giving him the name that he asks for.'

'You have never known my name. We met at Moscow.'

'In society?'

'No; at the Hotel Sans Souci, and in public places. Pardon me if, with only this title to your notice, I have ventured to accost you at so inopportune an hour. The importance of the motive will, I hope, be some excuse to a mind so generous as yours.'

'What can I do for you?' said Railly, in a tone of extreme courtesy; yielding to the sympathetic interest which the pleasing face and manners of the young man had inspired.

'I have come to ask for liberty.'

'Of me?'

'Of you.'

'Are you not mistaken?' asked Sir James, with some hesitation, not knowing exactly what to make of this singular demand, 'I am Sir James Railly, an Englishman by birth, remarkable for nothing but a love of play.'

'And for success in it,' cried the young man. 'It is my only hope. If I should tell you, Sir, that it is perhaps reserved for you to rescue a fellow man from an opprobrious condition, to efface from his brow a mark which devotes him to humiliation and scorn, what would you reply?'

'You embarrass me; for I do not see what such an hypothesis can have to do with a gentleman like yourself.'

'A gentleman! Yes, by elevation of soul, perhaps, also, by education; but not by the accident of birth. I am a slave.'

'You!' said Railly, with astonishment.

'My name is Swerkof-Feodorwitz, and the estate on which I was born belongs to Prince Gouloubskoff.'

'How can I serve you?' asked Railly, extending his hand affectionately to the young man. 'I would gladly do more than pity you. But let us go this way,' he added, taking the direction of a path which led away from the throng; 'it is more prudent. You know, perhaps, that the Prince is here.'

'Yes, but I could not choose the moment to speak to you. This evening, I believe the court gives a fete at the Retterburg.'

'Yes.'

'You will not return to Vienna, for after the fete you are to go to the chateau of the Count de Solensk.'

'Yes.'

'To play there?'

'The whole night, and Gouloubskoff will be there.'

'I was well informed,' He hesitated a moment, and, a deep shadow passed over his countenance.

'Is not that the livery of the prince which I see near us?' asked Sir James Railly.

'It is.'

'He cannot be far off. Shall we not avoid meeting him?'

'With all my heart. Not that I fear to be recognised immediately: long years have passed since we met; but I could not exchange ten words with him without exciting remembrances, and all hope would be lost.'

'Let us follow this path then;' and putting spurs to their horses, they soon found themselves out of sight and hearing of the chase.'

'Here,' said Sir James, 'we are safe from observation.'

'Before going farther,' resumed the young Russian, 'I must ask you to take charge of this;' handing him a pocket-book. 'Within it are bank notes to the amount of a million roubles.'

'A million!' exclaimed Railly, surprised out of his usual calm by the amount.

'Take it, sir, I beg of you, and deign to listen to me. My father and I were born on a small estate near the Volga. The estate belonged to Prince Gouloubskoff, the father of the Prince now in Vienna. My father was attached to his person for a long time, and served him with such zeal and devotion, that at his death, he bequeathed him a considerable sum; but unfortunately for our family, he forgot his enfranchisement. My father trafficked in furs with southern Russia, and being intelligent and energetic, he grew rapidly rich. My education was entrusted to a French emigrant, and to his care I owe all my subsequent success; for, when I grew up, I joined my efforts to those of my father, and, extending our operations to the East, I doubled his fortune in the course of a few years. Our position as serfs excited the solicitude of my friend, the Frenchman, and he urged me to seek an adopted country in the Western World; but, though I ardently desire to withdraw my neck from the yoke of bondage, I could not fly without leaving my poor old father a prey to my master's vengeance. If I once left Russia finally, the smallest chastisement for him would be the loss of his property, and a return to the rudest labors of slavery. I could not do it. Besides, I nourished a hope, which strengthened me each day to await the morrow. I thought that Alexander, who, it was said, was anxious to efface the title of regenerator of his country [illegible] with the abolition of servitude. But all the philantrophy of the Emperor terminated as it was by the hateful and powerless nobles, produced only the ukase, which forbade the individual sale of the serfs; they could only be sold with the estate. I had waited in vain.'

'Why did you not buy your purchase yourself?'

'It would have been useless. The great Muscovite nobles [illegible] bind themselves not to accept the ransom of a slave. Are you ignorant that a serf of Count Scheremetoff offered two million of roubles for his liberty, and was pitilessly refused! Yet the Count received but a small annual tribute from this man; only a few roubles; but these great lords find a cruel pleasure in counting in the number of their vassals, and absolutely dependent on their caprice millionaries whose fortune they could ruin at a word. I have borne my hard lot with the fortitude of a Christian. I have sought to forget it in business and travel and deeds of charity; but now my courage fails, for I love—and the woman who accepts me for a husband must accept the chain of slavery.'

After a moment's pause, the young Russian resumed. 'Prince Gouloubskoff, I have said, possesses an estate on the borders of the Volga. It counts only fifty hearths, yet he will not sell it at any price. But the Prince plays, and play is with him an unbridled passion, for which he will sacrifice everything. In the feverish excitement of this passion, he may be led to risk this estate. If he does so, he may lose. In this village I was born—my father was born there—my family are still there.—Gain this village for me—Man, Englishman, Christian—under this triple title I put my fate in your hands—you have an unlimited credit over my purse—stake everything—triumph at any price—if fate should be against you, if I must lose everything, and yet remain a slave, I will bless you at least for having tried to break my chains.'

'I accept the task,' said Sir Railly, gravely.

'This night?'

'No, this night circumstances will not serve. They will play lansquenet, besides, I have an engagement with O'Bearn. But the day after, I think a favorable occasion will offer naturally between Gouloubskoff and myself. He will not recoil, I judge, by the temerity he showed yesterday. I will profit by it.'

'Thanks! Sir James,' said Swerkof, 'and now we must separate. Your friends will seek you. I would avoid meeting them.'

Four days after this conference, a dense crowd was collected in one of the gaming halls, around a small table under the rotunda, at which were seated two players! They were Sir James Railly and Prince Gouloubskoff. For two days, these two had been contending for victory—now at lansquenet, now at ecarte; and the losses of Railly amounted to 200,000 roubles. The game at present was ecarte, and had been four against four; but the betters, becoming alarmed, thought it prudent to resume their stakes; they were renewed by the Prince and Railly, and the stake now amounted to the round sum of 50,000 florins.

The cards were shuffled and distributed; the trump card was hearts; they were renewed [illegible].

Fire sparkled in the eyes of the Prince but those of Railly were impenetrable. It was not a man, but a statue the expression never changed.

'I [illegible],' said the Prince.

'I have [illegible].

'I [illegible] repeated.

'Hearts again!'

'Here!'

'Hearts!'

Railly leaned back in his chair, looking with indifference on the table, the heap of gold, to which the hands of the Prince were eagerly extended.

The joy of Gouloubskoff amounted to intoxication; 'you will not quit playing I hope, Sir James,' he said 'an Englishman never abandons the field of battle.'

'Never, Prince! nor a Russian either. Is it not so?'

'It is national prejudice with us; but perhaps you would like to change the game. Will faro for two suit you!'

'Faro let it be.'

The two adversaries entered the lists again. The Prince held the bank, and gained 20,000 roubles. His good fortune seemed fatality itself. Yet the perfect calmness of the Englishman was not less astonishing. He pursued his object with the impassibility of his compatriots before the French battalions at Waterloo, when Wellington, seeing his soldiers fall one after the other, took his watch, and said: They die so many a minute, I have yet such a number of men; it will be an hour before the last one falls, Blucher will have time to arrive; the victory is mine!'

Railly dealt in his turn. This time fortune passed over to his side. He gained. He doubled his stake, and gained again. He had just gathered up 80,000 roubles, when he announced that he had tripled his stake.

The Prince was too good a player to recoil. Railly still gained. Gouloubskoff still played on, till he had exhausted all the gold and notes at his disposal. He then proposed to play on [illegible] the stakes upon the table. [illegible] accepted, and gained three times in succession.

'[illegible] Count,' he said, 'I have gained 900,000 roubles.'

'I [illegible] you,' said the Prince, with a nervous [illegible] countenance. He began to shuffle.

'You will not quit playing I hope, Prince. A Russian never abandons the field of battle.'

'Never, Sir James, as I told you. But shall we change the game? The air is stifling here. Let us go into the garden. You have a reputation as a marksman; suppose we try a shot.'

Railly, who saw the feverish agitation of his companion, readily accepted. Besides, custom required that he should be at the disposals of his adversary.

In a moment the hall was empty.

'What a [illegible] Sir James.'

'Two hundred thousand roubles.'

'Agreed, but I have no more gold; and I must not exhaust my credit at the bank of Vienna, which is quite indispensable to me.'

'Then I will wager 200,000 roubles against one of your estates.'

'Do you wish to become a Muscovite proprietor.'

'It is a mere whim, like any other.'

'And one which I am not disposed to thwart. I have something of that value near Moscow. It is on the declivity of a hill, from which you can see admirably the yet smoking ruins of the holy city. I have also a town at two miles from Vologdo——.'

Railly shrugged his shoulders. 'It is too cold,' he said.

'Ah! then I have something else which may suit you, a charming little village near the Volga.'

'Here goes for the Volga, then. And you estimate this property——.'

'At something more than 200,000 roubles.'

'Then I add 50,000 to my stake.'

'Agreed; but I have not the title-deeds here.'

'Pen, ink and paper can supply them.'

Writing materials were brought, and the Prince engaged in writing to transfer to Sir James, if he were the winner, the title of his domain upon the Volga.

The bet was to be decided by the shots. They drew lots for the first fire, and the Prince won, and took his place.

About seventy feet before him were placed, in a circular line, five small cages, twelve feet apart, each containing a pigeon. Cords were attached to the trap-doors which closed the cages, and were sufficiently long to reach the spot where the marksmen stood, which was called the post.

These cords by the rule of the game, were to be placed in the hands of the adverse party, who always stood behind the marksman, and, while the latter had his eye intently fixed upon the cords, his antagonist was permitted to agitate them and to feign to pull before doing so; thus it was impossible to foresee on which side the shot was to be directed; yet it was necessary to aim quickly, for the bird from its love of liberty, departs instantly and with an energetic wing.

You might have heard a pin fall upon the turf when Railly and the Prince had taken their positions, and the signal was given. The cords were agitated, and a door fell on the left. The Prince turned his weapon in that direction and fired.

'Down!' cried, distinctly, the voice of the official.

The same stillness prevailed when it was Sir James's turn to fire. The trap fell. The shot followed instantly.

'Down!' exclaimed the voice instantly.

'Did you say, Prince, that the estate borders on the Volga?'

'From the balcony of the house you can see the course of the river!'

An explosion was heard.

'Down!' said the same voice.

'There are magnificent plantations of young trees, grouped with infinite art—delicious fruits, fine peaches.'

'That is my favorite fruit.'

'Down!'

The strife continued with success on both sides, till the sixth shot, when Railly failed.

'[illegible]

At the eighth trial, the Prince having failed and Railly [illegible] they were again equal, and the two sportsmen took a moment for repose.

The Prince again took his place, fired and missed. Railly was more fortunate. The bet was approaching its solution.

What passed in the souls of the Prince and Sir James? It was a mystery beyond human intuition. To some the approach of an important event is announced by low inward voices, to other presentiments seem mere follies and chimeras. But it appeared certain, when the Prince took his place again, that [illegible] without a word, without [illegible] without the haughty look which was natural to him.

He fired. The bird, which had flown in a straight line, suddenly turned.

'Wounded!' said some.

'Dead!' said others.

'No, No!' cried several voices.

Every eye was fixed upon it; but it mounted, described [illegible] circle, and it disappeared, while Railly clamly whistled, 'God save the King.'

Railly having killed [illegible] bird, the bet was declared [illegible] said, but the Prince failed [illegible] were superb at this moment, each in his fashion: the Prince, by the courage which raised him above his loss, and Railly by the deep concentrated joy which he felt in thinking of the serious consequences of his success. They extended their hands to each other, and separated the best friends in the world. It was but an incident of sportsman life, which might have its counterpart to-morrow!

Fifteen days passed. The act of cession, first made out, in the name of Railly, then transferred to that of Feodorwitz, was fully authenticated and Sir James quitted Vienna.

He attempted to restore the million of roubles, which was entrusted to him, not wishing to receive a price for an action whose only merit, he said, was success; but he could not resist the entreaty of the ransomed serf. Feodorwitz forced him to accept, inscribing upon the pocket-book, these words:

'To the free man who has made me free!'

Poetry.

EVELYN HOPE.

BY ROBERT BROWNING.

Beautiful Evelyn Hope is dead!
Sit and watch by her side an hour:
That is her book-shelf, and this her bed;
She plucked that piece of geranium flower,
Beginning to die, too, in the glass.
Little has yet been changed, I think—
The shutters are shut, no light can pass
Save two long rays thro' the hinges' chink.

Sixteen years old when she died!
Perhaps she had scarcely heard my name—
It was not her time to love; beside,
Her life had many a hope and aim,
Duties enough and little cares,
And now was quiet, now astir,
Till God's hand beckoned unawares,
And the sweet white brow is all of her.

Is it too late, then, Evelyn Hope?
What! your soul was pure and true,
The good stars met in your horoscope,
Made you of spirit, fire, and dew—
And just because I was thrice as old,
And our paths in the world diverged so wide,
Each was nought to each, must I be told?
We were fellow-mortals, nought beside?

No, indeed! for God above
Is great to grant, as mighty to make,
And creates the love to reward the love.
I claim you still, for my own love's sake!
Delayed, it may be, for more lives yet,
Through worlds I shall traverse, not a few—
Much is to learn and much to forget
Ere the time be come for taking you.

But the time will come—at last it will—
When, Evelyn Hope, what meant, I shall say,
In the lower earth, in the years long still,
That body and soul so pure and gay?
Why your hair was amber, I shall divine,
And your mouth of your own geranium's red—
And what you would do with me, in fine,
In the new life come in the old one's stead.

I have lived, I shall say, so much since then,
Given up myself so many times,
Gained me the gains of various men,
Ransacked the age, spoiled the climes;
Yet one thing, one, in my soul's full scope,
Either I missed, or itself missed me—
And I want and find you, Evelyn Hope!
What is the issue? let us see!

I loved you, Evelyn, all the while;
My heart seemed full as it could hold—
There was place and to spare for the frank young smile
And the red young mouth, and the hair's young gold.
So, hush—I will give you this leaf to keep—
See, I shut it inside the sweet cold hand.
There, that is our secret! go to sleep;
You will wake, and remember and understand.

A VISION.

At dead of night, when others sleep,
Near Hell I took my station;
And from that dungeon, dark and deep,
O'er heard this conversation:
"Hail, Prince of Darkness, ever hail,
Adored by each infernal,
I come among your gang to wail,
And taste of death eternal.

'Where are you from?' the friend demands,
'What makes you look so frantic?
Are you from Carolina's strand,
Just west of the Atlantic?
Are you that man of blood and birth,
Devoid of human feeling?
The wretch I saw, when last on earth,
In human cattle dealing?

'Whose soul with blood and rapine stain'd,
With deeds of crime to dark it;
Who drove God's image, starved and chained,
To sell like beasts in market?
Who tore the infant from the breast,
That you might sell its mother?
Whose craving mind could never rest,
Till you had sold a brother?

'Who gave the sacrament to those Whose chains and handcuffs rattle?
Whose backs soon after felt the blows;
More heavy than the cattle?'
'I'm from the South,' the ghost replies,
'And I was there a teacher:
Saw men in chains, with laughing eyes:
I was a Southern Preacher!

'In tasselled pulpits, gay and fine,
I strove to please the tyrants,
To prove that Slavery is divine,
And what the Scripture warrants.
And when I saw the horrid sight,
Of slaves by tortures dying,
And told their masters all was right,
I new that I was lying.

'I knew all this, and who cant doubt,
I felt a sad misgiving?
But still, I knew, if I spoke out,
That I should lose my living.
They made me fat, they paid me well,
To preach down abolition.
I slept—I died—I woke in Hell,
How altered my condition!

'I now am in a sea of fire,
Whose fury ever rages;
I am a slave, and can't get free,
Through everlasting ages.
Yes! when the sun and moon shall fade,
And fire the rocks dissever,
I must sink down beneath the shade,
And feel God's wrath for ever.

'Our Ghost stood trembling all the while
He saw the scene transpiring;
With soul aghast and visage sad,
All hope was now retiring.
The Demon cried, on vengeance bent,
"I say, in haste, retire!
And you shall have a negro sent
To attend and punch the fire."

Miscellaneous.

The Great Central Sea in Tropical Africa.

In the Calwer Missionsblatt, with some letters from Dr. Rebman, dated the 13th and 30th of April, there is a map forwarded by the learned missionary. On this map, between the Equator and 10 deg. of south latitude, and between the 23rd and 30th meridian, lies an immense sea, without outlet, twice as large as the Black Sea, including the Sea of Azof. It is designated Ukerewe, or Inner Sea, and the well known Nyassa Sea appears as a small bay on the southeast. Dr. Rebman refers to a map in detail which his companion, Dr. Erhardt, is bringing to Europe. This great discovery, the consequences of which can hardly be estimated, has rested hitherto on the testimony of the natives of both shores on the Inner Sea, with whom the missionaries came in contact. Dr. A. Petermann remarks, in a letter in "The Athenæum," that the African geographer, Mr. Cooley, argued long ago for the existence of a single great sea in the centre of Equatorial Africa.

Iron Houses.

Russian journals state that at a late fair at Nijegorod, an iron house was to be seen, composed of ante-chamber, bedroom and kitchen. The front was ornamented with columns, and had three windows; the walls, roof, staircase, &c., were all in iron. Its weight was nearly 26,000 pounds, and its price equivalent to about $1,280. Two men could take it down in one day, and it required only two days to put it up again.

Novel Case—A Sailor Woman.

A case which has become very interesting from the fact of a sailor woman being connected with it, is now pending before Alderman Isard, of the Third Ward, growing out of the recent shipment of seamen on board of the ship James Rea, of this port.

At a recent hearing the Alderman's office was densely crowded, and the following examination of a female witness took place by Mr. Joseph M. Doran, the counsel for the plaintiff. The witness was a very tall and fine looking woman, dressed as women are usually dressed, but there was a certain air about her that indicated she would have been more at home in pantaloons and a round jacket than in a bonnet and petticoats! We give the questions and answers:

'What is your name?'

'Emma Barnes.'

'Where were you born, and what is your business?'

'I was born at Moscow, in the State of Maine, and for eighteen months past have followed the sea as a sailor.'

'How old are you?'

'I am a little over seventeen years.'

'Have you had a protection?'

'I had, and have it still.'

'Under what name did you ship?'

'George Stewart.'

'What is your height and your weight?'

'My height, sir, in my bare feet, is full five feet nine and a quarter inches, and my weight is one hundred and eighty pounds on shore, at sea it is rather more.'

'Did you ship on board the ship James Rea?'

'I did.'

'In what capacity?'

'As an ordinary seaman.'

'Did you sign articles?'

'I did not.'

'Under what name and at what wages?'

'George Stewart, and eighteen dollars a month.'

'Did you get your advance?'

'I did not.'

'Did you go in the ship and do your duty as an ordinary seaman?'

'Certainly, and I came back to this port when the ship put back.'

'Are you a sailor, and can you go aloft and do all he ought to do?'

'As an ordinary seaman, I think I have no superior; as a cook and steward, every Captain has said I was a No. 1.'

'What is the duty of an ordinary seaman?'

'It is to do all he can, and obey orders and work cheerfully; that I have always done.'

'Is the James Rea a staunch ship?'

'She is a crack ship.'

'What do you mean by a crack ship?'

'I mean that her rigging is too heavy for her hull, and she is not ballasted right.'

'Why didn't they pay your advance money?'

'That I can't tell; I know I deserved it.'

'Do you like the sea?'

'That I do; rough as it is, there is something pleasant about it—a landsman's life is but one thing over and over again. A sailor at sea is kept too busy to be troubled with the blues.'

'Where do you intend to go next?'

'Down East, to see my friends and folks at home."

'How did you conceal your sex?'

'That, sir, I can't tell you now; perhaps when we are better acquainted, and are alone, I may tell you; women can keep secrets as well as men.'

'Didn't you lick a Yankee Captain once?'

'That I did; it was round the Horn—I mind it well; he was a big fellow—as big as I am, but over six feet. He picked a quarrel with me and struck me with his fist. I knocked him down with a left-hand blow; he fell on the quarter-deck and halloo'd like a calf, and I gave the saucy fellow just what he deserved.'

'Were you not afraid to trust yourself with sailors?'

'God knows I was not. They are easily managed, and generally speaking, they are the warmest-hearted beings in the world. I drank and smoked with them at all times. 'George Stewart' hasn't an enemy among them.'

'Is there any one of your messmates here?'

'Why, yes, there's my old friend 'George,' his last name I don't remember, (here the witness pointed out an old salt in the corner, chewing a monstrous quid, and looking all astonishment,) many and many a night have we slept together.'

'Didn't he know you were a woman?'

'Indeed he did not; the thought never entered his mind.'

'Are you really a woman?'

'I suppose I am.'

'That is not a direct answer; are you a woman or not?'

'On my oath, I am a woman and not a man.'

At this answer some of the sailors cried "George, you know you lie," but they were promptly called to order by the Alderman, and the examination proceeded for a short time and then closed, exhibiting on the part of the witness great readiness in answering all questions touching the duties of a sailor, the perils of the sea, and the attributes of a good ship. She then left the office, was handed into a carriage by 'Jim Tarpaulin,' a friend of her's, and was driven off amid the cheers of the throng of men and boys who stood on the pavement. The discovery of her sex by the mate of the James Rea occurred from her having unintentionally responded to an order given while aloft furling sails, in a feminine tone, instead of the rough voice previously used. He at once charged her with being a female, and she acknowledged it.

Unfortunate Males.

The Albany Register says that there is in that city a young man, seventeen years of age, possessing a voice and face so strikingly feminine, with some semblance in gait and manner to a female, that he is often mistaken for a female in male attire. He is often molested by rowdies, who take him for a female, and he has been obliged to obtain a certificate as to his sex from the Chief of Police, to insure himself from suspicion and arrest. The Register says that a brother of the young man possesses the same feminine countenance and voice, while his sister possesses a masculine face and voice. He has frequently assumed female attire, and feels at ease in that dress, and indeed is less liable to attract attention in that costume than the one properly belonging to him. Things have evidently got terribly mixed in that family.

Iron and Gutta Percha Cars.

Somebody in Albany is getting up a railroad car out of wrought iron and gutta percha. Such a car can be jammed, but not broken. It may smash up, but it can make no splinters, or lacerate limbs. The idea is a good one. If they should make some of the employees on railroads of India rubber, they would be quite as useful, and less likely to suffer injury from the results of their own carelessness and inefficiency. Railroad "operators," of course, could not be made of gutta percha, for it is necessary for them to break sometimes.—Boston Courier.

RECIPES, &c.

Milk Paint.

A paint has been used on the continent of Europe, with success, made from milk and lime, and dries quicker than paint, and has no smell. It is thus made.—Take fresh curds, and bruise the lumps on a grinding stone, or in an earthen pan or mortar, to make it just thick enough to be kneaded. Stir this mixture without adding more water, and a white colored fluid will soon be obtained, which will serve as a paint. It may be laid on with a brush with as much ease as varnish, and it dries very speedily. It must, however, be used the same day it is made, for if kept till next day it gets too thick; consequently, no more must be made at one time than is laid on in a day. Any color, red or yellow ochre, may be mixed with it in any proportion. Prussian blue is changed by the lime. Two coats of this paint are sufficient, and when dry it may be polished with a piece of woollen cloth, or similar substance, and it will become bright as varnish. It is only for inside work; but it will last very long if varnished over with the white of an egg after it has been polished.

Nice Pancakes for Supper.

These are made of eggs, flour, and milk. The just proportions are one tablespoonful of flour to each egg. To make small pancakes, beat a couple of eggs thoroughly, and add sweet milk. Then take a couple of tablespoonsful of flour, work into a thin paste and ductile batter by adding the milk and eggs, and a little salt. Grease the pan with a piece of sweet lard or butter, and stir briskly to prevent adhering to the bottom. When the under side is sufficiently browned, turn it. Leave the cakes folded, with sugar or honey and butter between the folds, or sugar alone. If this be found to be too solid, add more eggs and use less flour. A slight sprinkle of grated nutmeg will be an addition.—Maine Farmer.

Egg Dumplings.

Make a batter of a pint of milk, two well-beaten eggs, a saltspoonful of salt, and flour enough to make a batter as for poundcake; have a clean saucepan of boiling water; boil fast, drop in the batter by the tablespoonful; four or five minutes will boil them. Take them with a skimmer on to a dish; put a bit of butter and pepper over, and serve with boiled or cold meat. For a little dessert, put butter and grated nutmeg, with syrup or sugar over.—Maine Farmer.

Carrots for Feeding Poultry.

I have never seen anything in your paper recommending carrots as food for poultry. I feed them to my fowls every day, and find it profitable to do so. In the present high prices of grain, &c., it is worth while people to use any substitute that will answer the same purpose. I venture to say that those who have fed their fowls on carrots, chopped fine will not readily discontinue the practice. The chopping is most easily done with a common sausage meat cutter, costing about $3. These machines will pay their entire cost, in most families, in a single year, in various labor-saving ways. A couple of boys, in a single evening could easily cut a barrel full of carrots, which if fed to hens mixed with meal, scraps, &c., would be worth much more than the same value in grain at present prices.—Rural New Yorker.

APPLES FOR COWS.—I live in a country where in times past apples fed to cows were said to dry up their milk. I think that may have been the case when fed in large quantities. I have been feeding a cow some four or five quarts a day, regularly, and never had one give so much or so rich milk before. As apples will not generally keep the winter in cellars, they may be spread on the barn floor and frozen, then piled up and covered with hay or straw, where they will keep, and may be used as wanted by pouring water upon them.—N. E. Farmer.

The "First Premium" Farm.

The Committee on Farm Management of the New York State Fair, awarded $50 in plate to Wm. P. Ottley, of Phelps, Ontario Co., for the best managed farm. But two applications were made for the premium, though we think there are many farms which would have stood an equal chance with those which were presented.

The soil of Mr. Ottley's farm is a gravelly loam, and muck with a tincture of clay, the subsoil about the same, lighter colored and porous. Limestone scarce, the rocks found are granite and quartz. The farm contains 100 acres, 85 in cultivation. Mr. O. considers ploughing in clover the best means of enriching his ground. A three years' lay turned under in June for wheat, or the 1st of May with barnyard manure, for the corn crop succeeds well.

He ploughs from seven to ten inches deep. Deep ploughing in his case, has a good effect in giving great room for the roots of plants, in its action as an underdrain, in preventing the effects of drought, in making the land easier to work after it, with other advantages too numerous to mention. Some experiments showing this, and also the difference between shallow and deep ploughing, were made by Mr. O, and we may refer to them hereafter. In regard to subsoil ploughing, he says the effects were entirely satisfactory after the first year, when the crop was lighter than usual, from the poverty of subsoil before due exposure to atmospheric influence.

Manure receives considerable attention on the farm of Mr. Ottley. His straw, cornstalks and hay, is all fed out in the stables and yards, where his cattle are kept through the foddering season. The straw serves for litter, and having an abundance, also about 65 head of horses, cattle and sheep, he makes about 200 loads of manure annually. This he draws out in a green state to his corn-field, (usually planting 12 acres,) putting from 30 to 40 loads per acre, according to its value. It is dropped in similar heaps about one rod apart, and generally as fast as it can be ploughed in. He has a manure cellar, but keeps a part under cover, and finds it a decided benefit. For barley he thinks rotten manure an essential application, it is of such quick growth that it receives little benefit from long manure.

Mr. Ottley has from seventy to seventy-five acres annually under tillage. His fields contain about twelve acres each, and the different crops follow in rotation and culture as follows:—For corn he takes a three year lay of clover, covers it with manure, and breaks up immediately before planting with a double plough, eight inches deep, harrows with a light harrow to avoid breaking the turf, then drills three and a half feet in rows, dropping one kernel at eight inches in a row together with ashes and plaster; and then rolls the whole field.

As soon as the corn is up, he passes through with the one-horse cultivator, continues to cultivate until the middle of June—product usually 50 bushels per acre. Usually plants one acre of potatoes in the same lot. One potato in each hill, split; plant as early as possible—product light, owing to prevalent disease.

Barley follows corn. He drills in two and a-half bushels per acre, in April, if possible, ploughing in the spring—product from 25 to 50 bushels per acre. Oats are also sown after corn, three bushels seed—product 75 bushels per acre.

Wheat is sown after barley, two bushels per acre, drilled in the first September. Ploughs the stubble eight to ten inches deep, with double plough, in two rod lands; harrows fine immediately before sowing; product from 25 to 35 bushels per acre. Seeds down to clover and timothy in September, soon after sowing, and uses for meadow or pasture till its turn in the rotation, usually three years when it is taken up as above described.

Mr. O., has been particular in growing and saving seeds for sowing. He has improved white Soules wheat, starting it from a handful, and saving the first ripened for seed, so as to shorten the time of maturing from six to eight days, he has made like experiments, with like results, in barley, oats and corn. His grains and roots were all trained up in this way, and he thinks it essential that seeds of all kinds should be saved from the first ripening and largest ears. His profits for 1854 are $7.54, or $8.87½ per acre for the improved land. His total receipts amount to nearly $2,000. His principal attention is given to grain growing, which he makes a profitable business, as these figures show.

A regular account is kept, together with a memorandum of farm matter. Mr. O. says he can state the annual expense of improving his farm, and the income of it, and at the end of the year can strike a balance of debt and credit. We join with him in thinking the practice very much conducive to close observation and careful farming; one which in the end would very much improve our system, as well as better our fortunes. It is little more than guess work, to farm without some guide—without some means of knowing what crops pay at the end of the year, and what prove a losing speculation.—Rural New Yorker.

A Speaker at Last.

The Republican head quarters are illuminated in honor of the election of Mr. Banks as Speaker! The greatest enthusiasm prevails among the republicans and the intelligence appears to give satisfaction generally. A salute will be fired on Monday.

☞ Every day the Slavery question in the United States becomes more complicated and threatening. Something like a war is now on the point of breaking out between the States of Virginia and Pennsylvania in relation to it. A Mr. Parsons went from the former to the latter State, in search of a runaway slave, and when he had found and captured his "chattel," the authorities of Pennsylvania stepped in between them and arrested Parsons for an attempt to kidnap. The subject is giving rise to much angry feeling and has already been discussed in the Legislatures of both States. The most fiery and warlike speeches have been delivered on both sides. The Supreme Court of the United States is to pronounce an opinion on the case. The end of the dispute is not yet, nor will it likely be, without an outburst of some kind.—Toronto Colonist, Feb. 4th.

Letter from Kossuth.

LONDON, Jan. 8.

My impression is, that the year 1856 will not pass without great revolutionary commotions in Europe. The camp of the Governments remains divided. In vain has Cabinet diplomacy loaded itself with one atrocious crime more—the crime of having sacrificed Kars to the speculation of having the road for an "Austrian peace," by affording to the Czar the prestige of a victory, at the expense of Turkey, over a heroic garrison more glorious in its fall than the Allies in their success at Sebastopol—just as Saguntum is is more glorious by its fall than its victors by conquering it. Peace is impossible. The immorality of kings will continue to squander away the blood and treasure of nations in an aimless war, but the nations will awake; and one of those tremendous commotions which mark an era in history will shake to its very foundation this our old country. Such is my presentiment.

But if the signs of the times do not deceive us, the prospects of America are not brighter if not gloomier. We have our despots you have slavery—This is the worst of the two. With us nations will stand against tyrants; with you the nation will stand divided in itself and brother raise his hand against brother in irreconcilable antagonism. For the first time in your short history (which by its shortness, should warn from perfidence,) will the presidential election turn exclusively on the issue of Slavery—that stain on your escutcheon, that curse on your security. A sore trial it will prove forsooth. Slavery will in all probability carry the day. The slaveholding interest stands compact, not so with their opponents; social and material interest divide their camp. The slaveholding interests is sure of some auxiliary supplement from that quarter. Their victory is more than probable. However the election is not a solution, it is but a symptom, and nothing more; it is but fuel added to the flame. Thrice already since the Constitution was framed in 1787, thrice already this question has been compromised But compromises between principles cannot last. It is but a palliative. The sickness recurs, and either I am greatly mistaken, or else it will not bear another compromise.—Either Freedom or Slavery; the two cannot go along together. May the Almighty eye watch in mercy over your trials.

Annual Slave Letting near Washington

Our Washington correspondent gives the following account of the annual sale of the labor of the slaves in that vicinity:

"Last Saturday week many of our eastern men went across the line into Virginia, to be present at the annual sale of the labor of the negroes for the year, or in other words, hiring out the slaves to the highest bidder. At Fairfax Court House the scene was diversified with many ludicrous incidents and some too that would have drawn tears from the most stolid of men. The negroes are allowed to go through the crowd and request those who they would prefer to serve, to bid for them. Most of the slaves do this, so it is no uncommon thing for a darkey to give a list of his accomplishments, and produce every recommendation in his favor that he can obtain. A woman whose children were retained by her owner, but who was to be hired out that year, requested a near neighbour of that owner to hire her, so that she could be near her children. To induce this man to make a higher bid than his competitors she offered to pay the difference in advance, from her own pocket. One wished to be hired to the man who had obtained the services of his wife, and to bring this about he showed a recommendation from the master of last year, and also a license to exhort in the Methodist Church. The men were hired out at the rate of from $30 to $135; the women $30 to $70; and the boys from $40 to $80. The girls were hired out as a general thing for their board and clothes —Boston Traveller.

Marriages of Slaves.—An Item for Abolitionists.

A standing topic of argument against slavery, with the Abolitionists—those, at least, who pretend at all to argument—is the assertion that it virtually ignores or disregards the marital tie. Admitting the utmost possible force in the argument, it could be met by counter statements against any form or mode of labour; for the separation of husband and wife is a common incident to the hireling white and black, no less than to the slave. We could appeal also to the experience of all Southern observers, in proof that our slaveholders and planters generally were anxiously disposed to respect and protect the marital relations of slaves, and that more difficulty is found in educating and training the slaves themselves to regard it than in protecting it when established on a good basis. We introduce the matter, however, only to mention a fact lately brought into our notice, which speaks more than any assertions could as to the relative attatchments of the negroes.

The case to which we refer is, briefly, a voluntary and mutual dissolution and rupture of a marriage of fifty years' happy and agreeable duration between slaves; and this was by the consent of both parties, each preferring to sever this relation rather than to leave the master's family, although the option was left to each and either—as is most generally the case. The circumstances were these: The wife was an old nurse and a "mama" of a family migrating to Florida, and had for years lived in a condition of indulgence and ease, better than could have been possible had she been free actually, as she was virtually. On the closing of an estate by sale for division, under our laws, she was necessarily offered for sale, and was purchased by the son of the mistress, to whom she had been nurse and favourite maid—This gentleman, who had often in his boyish days received at her hands the rod, which the wise king recommends as a sovereign specific for the foolishness of childhood, very naturally and characteristically offered her freedom, so far as it could be done, and gave her the choice of three residences for life, and at the same time promised ample and abundant comforts. To his surprise her answer was, "No, massa, I goes wid you to the new country." He told her of her husband, and again asked her to chose a nominal master and protector in the neighbourhood, and one of these places offered to her was the plantation on which her husband lived.

She persisted that her first choice was to follow her master, when he immediately resolved to purchase her husband, whose owner was equally anxious to protect and spare the marital tie of a veteran servant. The bargain was soon settled between the masters, for both slaves were too old to have been worth any consideration under any other system but the permanent tie of slavery; but an unexpected difficulty occurred. The husband stoutly refused to leave his master's family, and protested that deeply and long as he had loved his wife, he could not leave his home to follow her.

State the naked proposition that a husband and wife of such age and qualities had been separated, and Abolitionism would at once find matter for tear-moving homilies. Yet here is one plain case of very late occurrence, in which such a separation occurred against the desires and intention of two slaveholders, and by the alternative choice of two slaves.

Can any of our Northern moralists tell us how many whites marriages have been cruelly and miserably severed by California migration.

We intend, by the way of compensation to the Rockingham (Va.) Gazette for the subjoined article, to send the editor a copy of "Five hundred mistakes of daily occurrence." The title of his article shows that he needs it badly.—Ed. Tribune.

"WHAT A NEGRO DONE.—Davy Crockett was a great hunter, but there are other great hunters who have performed wonderful deeds, and killed great quantities of varmints. There lives a darkey over in Pendleton, the servant of Wm. Anderson, Esq., who certainly deserves a name among the hunters of the times. Some time ago he performed an exploit which we think deserves a large pieter in the next year's Crockett almanac:

"A pack of dogs had chased a large wolf until they got him into a fence corner, when he took his stand and made a desperate fight. The dogs were a pretty boy for a short time. Sambo coming up and observing how the game stood, soon determined upon his plan of operation. He crossed the fence, getting behind the wolf caught hold of one of his legs and pulled it through a crack. He then got that leg with one hand, he with the other drew the other leg through, being careful to have a rail between them. He then took a string from his pocket and tied the wolf's legs tightly together. In the meantime the fight between the wolf and dogs was kept up. After seeing that all was secure, Sambo started in great haste for the house. Upon meeting one of his young masters, he told him what had happened, and upon being asked why he did not kill the wolf, he said 'he was too smart for dat, for he knowed dat black folks no good witness, and he want a white man to see him kill de wolf, so he could git de bounty for his scalp.' He went back with his master and killed the wolf outright.

"But he was engaged in another [illegible] exploit. While hunting in the mountains, he wounded a large buck, which, becoming furious, made an attack upon him, when Sambo caught him firmly by the antlers, threw him upon his shoulders, and carried him to a house, where he had his throat cut. We think that this was about as summary a mode of disposing of an enemy as we have ever heard of. If anybody can beat our Sambo in the wolf and buck line, we should like to hear from them."

The following article, from the Shelby News, gives an account of an unsuccessful attempt to run off some slaves from Henry County, Kentucky:—

EMINENCE, Dec. 26, 1855.

Some things of late have "turned up," to use the Micawber's pet phrase, in our usual quiet community, which may have, in the estimation of your readers, more than a local interest. If you think as I do, I propose to send a brief history of them to the News for publication.

There has long been a suspicion that there were white men in or around New Castle, tampering with and attempting to seduce off slave property. But nothing definite or tangible has been known, until recently, by which these worthy philanthropists could be dealt with legally. Their increasing boldness and success of late, however, excited the vigilance of some of our sharp-sighted citizens, who have succeeded in tracing the villainy to its source.

Sometime about the first of October, three negro men, the property of William Smith, Sr., William Smith, Jr. and Jas. McElwain, were enticed away, and made their escape by help of the underground sale to Canada. These lucky or unlucky fugitives attempted to communicate the good news of their arrival in the "land of refuge," to some of their colored friends, together with a glowing description of the multitude of good things which were waiting to be enjoyed by darkies, all for nothing but the coming.

But this gospel message was intercepted, and fell into hands for which it was by no means intended. But when opened—lo! what should be seen among the news, &c., but the names of their white accomplices. But this intelligence was kept rather silent until "something more should turn up. In the meanwhile, Mr. Nathan Mills discovered his negroes conspiring with some of their neighbouring brethren to make a start for Canada. In their conversation overheard, they implicated a man named Stewart, living in New Castle, and made an appointment to meet at his house [illegible] to bring [illegible] to a crisis. They were [illegible] up by Messrs. Brand, Mayfield, Carraway, Tandy, Boyd, [illegible] Stewart. The party [illegible] [illegible] times were right to start for "happy Canada." But unfortunately [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

NOTHING LIKE LEATHER.

IF YOU WOULD BE RICH,

Read this, and save your Penny.

GOOD morrow, friend—I'm a stranger in your borough, can you inform me where I can get a pair of good boots made?"

"Yes, sir, I can; just go to T. W. WILSON'S, King St. East, Chatham, next to Smith's Grocery; that's the place; he'll accommodate you most satisfactorily."

"Well, how is your judgment in regard to the quality of boots and shoes?"

"Most excellent—I'm an old boot and shoe maker; many are the days that I've drawn the cords."

"Where did you say I could find him?"

"Why, the next door to Mr. Andrew Smith's Grocery, corner of King and William Streets, East,—any person can tell you."

"Will you conduct me there?"

"I will with pleasure; for I know him to be, from experience, one of the best manufacturers of BOOTS AND SHOES in town. His stock is of his own maunfacture, and he has always on hand a superior quality for gentlemen's wear. He's also very particular in getting up his work; so I'm confident he can't fail to give reasonable satisfaction to those who favor him with their patronage."

"There are some boot makers whose work is beautiful to the eye, but plaguy pinching to the feet; and I have lumps upon each instep, which in foul weather give me excruciating pain."

"Ah, yes, too much have I suffered by fetters from the boot moulders hands; but he's not one of them; he endeavours to make a systematic fit, measuring from joint to heel, and from lump to toe—closely observing the most minute protuberance, if there be any upon the feet; and he seldom fails to make his boots set as easy thereon as a glove upon a lady's tender finger. Besides, he always keeps a superior stock on hand; perhaps you might obtain a pair upon the instant that would fit your feet and please the eye."

"Then I must try him."

"Try him, of course, and you'll save at each end of your bargain. First—you'll buy cheaper—secondly, your boots will wear you longer."

"Come, let's go."

"I'm ready—Are you a cash man?"

"I am; for he who pays cash clips the discount of credit, and secures it in his own pocket."

"Then that's the place, for his motto reads"—

Ask of me no trust, when you come to buy;
Ask of me no trust, for you I must deny;
Ask of me no trust, it hath destroyed many;
Ask of me no trust, I cannot grant you any;
Ask of me no trust, but with your cash rally;
Ask of me no trust, nor with my pocket dally.

Poetry.

A HOME PICTURE.

BY MRS. ANN R. PORTER.

An old man sat by the chimney side—
His face was wrinkled and wan—
And he leaned both hands on his stout oak cane,
As if all his work was done.

His coat was of good old-fashioned gray,
With pockets both deep and wide,
Where his specs and steel tobacco-box
Lay snugly side by side.

The old man liked to stir the fire,
So near him the tongs were kept;
Sometimes he mused as he gazed at the coals—
Sometimes he sat and slept.

What did he see in the embers there?
Ah! pictures of other years;
And now and then they awakened smiles,
But oftener they started tears.

His good wife sat on the other side,
In the high back cane-seat chair;
You see 'neath the frill of her muslin cap
The sheen of her silvery hair.

She wears a blue checked apron now,
And is knitting a sock for him;
Her pale, blue eyes have a gentle look,
And she says, "They are growing dim."

I like to call and tell the news,
And chat an hour each day.
For it stirs the blood of the old man's heart,
To hear of the world away.

Be kind unto the old, my friends,
They're worn with this world's strife,
Though bravely once perchance they fought
The battle erst with life.

They taught our youthful feet to climb
Upward life's rugged steep;
Then let us lead them gently down
To where the weary sleep.

A PARODY.

Come saints and sinners, hear me tell
How pious priests whip Jack and Nell,
And women buy, and children sell,
And preach all sinners down to hell,
And sing of heavenly union.

'They'll bleat and baa, dona like goats,
Gorge down black sheep, and strain at motes,
Array their backs in fine black coats,
Then seize their negroes by their throats,
And choke, for heavenly union.

'They'll church you if you sip a dram,
And damn you if you steal a lamb;
Yet rob old Tony, Doll, and Sam;
Of human rights, and bread and ham;
Kidnapper's heavenly union.

'They'll loudly talk of Christ's reward,
And bind his image with a cord,
And scold, and swing the lash abhorred.
And sell their brother in the Lord
To handcuffed heavenly union.

'They'll read and sing a sacred song,
And make a prayer both loud and long,
And teach the right and do the wrong,
Hailing the brother, sister throng,
With words of heavenly union.

'We wonder how such saints can sing,
Or praise the Lord upon the wing,
Who roar, and scold, and whip, and sting,
And to their slaves and mammon cling,
In guilty conscience union.

'They'll raise tobacco, corn, and rye,
And drive, and thieve, and cheat, and lie,
And lay up treasures in the sky,
By making switch and cowskin fly,
In hope of heavenly union.

'They'll crack old Tony on the skull,
And preach and roar like Bashan bull,
Or braying ass, of mischief full,
Then seize old Jacob by the wool,
And pull for heavenly union.

'A roaring, ranting, sleek man thief,
Who lived on mutton, veal and beef,
Yet never would afford relief
To needy, sable sons of grief,
Was big with heavenly union.

'Love not the world,' the preacher said,
And winked his eye, and shook his head;
He seized on Tom, and Dick, and Ned,
Cut short their meat, and clothes and bread,
Yet still loved heavenly union.

'Another preacher whining spoke
Of One whose heart for sinners broke:
He tied old Nanny to an oak,
And drew the blood at every stroke,
And prayed for heavenly union.

'Two others oped their iron jaws,
And waved, their children-stealing paws;
There sat their children in gewgaws:
By stinting negroes, backs and maws;
They keep up heavenly union,

All good from Jack another takes,
And entertains their flirts and rakes,
Who dress as sleek as glossy snakes,
And cram their mouths with sweetened cakes.
And this goes down for union.

Miscellaneous.

Domestic Life in South Carolina.

COLUMBIA, S. C., Jan. 8, 1856.

Much as has been written on the Domestic Institution of the South, there are features of that institution which have yet to be exhibited in their true colours, of which neither North nor South seem to be fully aware. In the North we are apt to suppose that there must be something in the "cherished institution" of Southern Slavery which is either profitable or very gratifying to Southern feelings. A sojourn, however, of a few weeks among our Southern neighbours is sufficient to convince us that whatever profit there may be attached to the traffic in slaves—to the breeding and raising of a stock of human chattels there is very little of either profit or gratification in the relation of master or mistress and slave, so far at least as that relation exists in the domestic circle. A few facts, which have come under our own observation, will serve to illustrate their position. We will not expose the doings of strictly private life. We will go no further than life in a boarding house, where we pay handsomely for all we have, and are consequently under no obligations for "Southern hospitality," but feel at liberty to use, for the benefit of truth and humanity, the developments which have forced themselves upon our attention. We do not seek to give extraordinary occurrences, but common life as it is here.

The family at this house consists of a hostess of portly dimensions, who has certainly been a handsome woman, and probably, in the early part of her life, a kind, good-natured, sociable, and perhaps even an amiable lady. She was the daughter of a Quaker family. She is evedently a woman of strong sympathies, and naturally generous in disposition; Miss Eliza, her sister, a maiden lady; a young man nineteen years of age son of the hostess, and his sister, a little lively girl about eleven years old, and the Deputy Marshal. The boarders consist of between thirty and forty merchants, and tradespeople of the city, nearly all of whom are of Northern birth, and, privately speaking, of Northern principles as well.

The remaining members of the family reside in outhouses along with the wood, dogs and vermin. They are as follows: "Big Sylvie," a coloured woman about thirty-five years of age. She is an inveterate cook, and has authority over the kitchen, under the hostess and Miss Eliza, and whose commands are daily enforced by the threats of the Deputy Marshal. Big Sylvie is a stout, well built negress with about one-fourth Anglo-Saxon blood. In addition to her accomplishments as a cook, she has acquired the art of smoothing bosoms and of dressing washes, in which she has attained a degree of perfection equalled by that of many of the white race around her. Her person, her clothes, her horses are to be thoroughly soaked in a very dark coloured oil, or, in more common language, "grease." It is possible that water is applied to her face and hands occasionally, but it is by accident and not from any desire for cleanliness. We do not often venture even to look into the kitchen, as it is by no means conducive to an appetite for dinner. We cannot say what the floor of the kitchen is paved with. It is possible that there are bricks there, but they cannot be discovered without considerable excavation. Big Sylvie never leaves the kitchen; she lives there, she sleeps there, adjusts her toilet there, smokes there, boards there, drinks there, and—when yet she can get enough of the favourite beverage—gets drunk there. The dining-room is up one flight of stairs and Big Sylvie has established herself as much as is not within her province to have an appearance in the dining-room even after the boarders have dined. She has a very nice keen on this boundary question, and I have been frequently amused at the pertinacity with which she adheres to her established custom in this respect.

It is necessary to call the cook Big Sylvie to distinguish her from the waiting or chambermaid, whose name is likewise Sylvie. Little Sylvie is a neat young woman, so nearly white as to be equal in appearance to many who boast of the Anglo-Saxon origin; all that is wanted being the blush on her cheeks. She did not know who to call father, and her mother was nearly as white as herself. Slavery does not suit Little Sylvie. She has spirit and no small share of intelligence. For a wife we would infinitely prefer her to the "Miss Eliza" who exercised so much authority over her. She only needs education. It appears that she had proved a temptation to one of "the boys," and the result was a fine baby, which our hostess took charge of and treated it "as kindly as though it had been wholly white," and (as is too often the case with white children) nursed it to death. Little Sylvie knows a little too much for complete submission, and not enough to effect her escape. She threatens she will run away when the Marshal exercises his cruel authority over her, and on one occasion she did run away, but was found at the home of her owner, a slave-breeder in the neighbourhood, who, in all probability, is her father. She had been hired, however, by our hostess, and she was of course, for the time being, her property. Having learned her whereabouts, Mr. Frank, the young man above mentioned, and the Marshal, were despatched to bring her back, with instructions from our hostess "not to strip her, not to draw blood in whipping her." and "not to give her more than six lashes." Our good hostess was very particular in telling us these facts, to show her tender regard for Little Sylvie; and these words, taken verbatim from her own lips, just as they have those of the slaves have told us, that it is customary for a Marshal to take young girls and women to the guard-house, strip them quite naked, and then apply the lash, or take such other liberties with their persons as cruelty or lust may dictate. Here was a young man, not twenty years of age, sent after a woman, a mother, with instructions not to strip her and not to draw blood.

He had already threatened her with his vengeance, and how far the instructions of his mother were adhered to, when set on such an errand, may be easily imagined. I do not think little Sylvie was whipped in the usual form, brought back and forced by the Marshal to beg the pardon of her mistress, and to promise not to run away again. She stated that the reason she ran away was that her mistress had placed her under the authority of the Marshal, and she thought it unkind, and would not submit to it.

Our hostess explained to us that she found it so difficult to manage her servants that it became necessary for her to send for the Marshal to live in the house, so as to keep the negro subjection. So poor little Sylvie is obliged to submit to this bullying, threatening and whipping, that she cannot be contented. She is not happy.

Hark! what is that? At the moment of my writing I am interrupted by a shriek. Some one is crying bitterly. Who is it? Looking out at my window, I see coming up stairs poor little Sylvie, and by her side is the once amiable Mrs.——, who is now transformed into a demon in appearance, beating in an unmerciful manner this white young woman, who has a spirit, but not the liberty, to return blow for blow. In a few moments Sylvie was in our room.

"I came," said she, "Mr.——, because I thought you were in F——."

At this moment the being whom we have the charity to believe was once a good woman passed the door and cast in such a look as would have done credit to a Russian bear. It was one of the most fiend-like expressions of countenance we have seen since visiting the Lunatic Asylum in this city.

Little Sylvie, seeing this, turned off her remark to some other subject than the one she came upon, and, after saying a few words to my wife, left the room.

The hostess then came in, her countenance considerably improved, but still expressive of a strong feeling of satisfaction and excitement. "What did Sylvie say to you?" she demanded. We considered this question impertinent, and did not think it necessary to answer directly.

"Nothing in particular," I remarked. She said "she came because she thought I was in;" and then my wife asked her if she thought more of me than of her, and she thought she did. This playful remark had the effect of relaxing the features of the old lady, and she sat down on a trunk and related some of her troubles:

"The fact is," she said, "I find it more than I can do to keep that girl, Sylvie, to her work, and now she has been threatening to runaway. The reason I asked you what she said is, I thought she wanted you to give her a pass to help her along the railroad. Are there any slaves where you come from.

"We have none in New York," I replied.

The old lady looked more suspicious, and seemed to think she had an Abolitionist in her own house.

"Sylvie," she continued, "is an excellent servant; but she is dreadfully self-willed, and she makes me a great deal of trouble. She vows she will not submit to the Marshal. She has had one child; and when I threaten to have her flogged, she pretends she is the same way again, and she may be, for aught I know. But that is her way of getting off being whipped, because she thinks I will not have her whipped under such circumstances. The other day she was starting off and was going to her master, but I sent Marshal after her. It was very wet under foot, and if she had gone she would have caught cold, and that would have injured her. I do not want to have any man's property injured while it is in my possession. It keeps me in a constant state of excitement, night and day, to keep the servants at their work. They will worry my life out. There is big Sylvie, the cook; I gave her some whisky yesterday, and then she got more somewhere else, and was so drunk there was nothing ready for dinner. I would do anything to get clear of them. My life is a constant turmoil. These boys Ben and Dan, require to be told every day to bring your wood. I gave Dan a whipping yesterday about your wood, and as to influence. He requires to be told, I see he does not attend to it."

After going on in this strain for some time, our hostess finished her discourse, and we thought it would be easier to fetch our own wood than to be continually telling Dan to bring it. If she would go and live in New York, she would get clear of all trouble, as the servants there are paid for their labour and take a pride in establishing a good character as housekeepers.

"Well" she replied, "I should be glad to get clear of these negroes."

In addition to these slaves are "Georgia," a stout plantation negress from Georgia; and John a waiter, and three boys, Dan, Ben and Christopher, seven slaves in all, who receive only board and clothes for their labour.

Our laundress is an intelligent woman; nearly white, and of prepossessing appearance. Like those engaged in the house, she toils for the support of others. She says she pays $9 a month to her owner for the use of herself, $4 a month for rent, and has to clothe and board herself in the bargain. What an institution is this to be proud of! A man of wealth, under this "noble institution," takes from a poor widow woman $9 a month out of her hard earnings at the washtub, leaving her to maintain herself with the balance. Yet we are told, coloured people could not provide for themselves if free.

Here, then, is a specimen of domestic life in connection with an institution for the maintenance of which so much effort is made by our Southern neighbours. What is the effect on themselves? Here is a lady, brought up in a Quaker family, which is a guaranty of her originally good training, transformed, by the operation of this system, by the practice of enforcing unjust and cruel laws, converted into a fiend-like tyrant and misery to her and a terror to her wretched slaves. Such a system is this for a State calling upon Heaven for blessings in front of; for Legislatures to legalize, and for learned Judges to sustain; for Presidents to dignify as a "domestic institution" based on "constitutional rights," and for the Congress and Government of a great Republic to be striving to extend!

We submit that our experience here has been but little calculated to weaken our faith in the principle of Freedom, for we have looked in vain for a single counterbalance, either in the comfort and profit or convenience of masters, to set off against the enormous evils of ignorant vassalage on the one side, and of cruel and licentious tyranny on the other. Both masters and servants appear to us to be alike enslaved by this system, and could they be both enlightened as to the blessings of Liberty—could the prejudices of an unfortunate education on the one hand, and the evils of a legalized and compulsory ignorance on the other be removed—both might be led to rejoice in that freedom which extends to all equal rights, and equal responsibilities.

Patience—A Short "Dog's Tale."

"Get out, you cur." It was a wet November night. Tired out after a long walk, I was scraping my boots preparatory to mounting the marble door steps, those Sysiphus stones for Philadelphia servants, eternally rolled and rubbed, when, casting my eyes to the top step, there I saw couchant a poor, miserable, housless, outcast of a dog. "Get out you cur." This time I said it, shouted it out energetically, and waved my umbrella over his head as an intimidator. He never moved, but broke out into a "Whoo-h-o-hoo-woo-oo-uu!" that sounded, as it drew to a close, like a long wail after a dissipated life, sung, however, by a middle-aged gentleman whose lungs were yet strong and healthy. I believe that cur, if there's anything in metempsychosis, had the soul of a defunct house-carpenter inhabiting him, for he had chosen his lying-down spot, now changed into a sitting-up position, right under the front-door handle, and, had I used the dead-latch key, he would instantly have darted into the house. The gaslight from the street-lamp shone directly on him, and, as I raised my umbrella for the second time to give him a "whack," he turned his head sideways, and looked at me in such a human, comical manner, that my wrath gave way. "Poo-oor fellow!" I said this in a soothing voice, thinking, "I'll give him kind words if he can't get bones." They acted like magic. From a sitting-up-on-end-loafer-in-a-bar-room position, he jumped into a four-legged life. What a figure! He looked like one of those long low footstools you find in church pews, set in motion by a galvanic battery. In a spirit of waggery some brother loafer had tied round his neck a couple of old window-blind tassels, which hung like cowbells, and, at every motion of his body, swung responsive to his movements. I burst out into a roar of laughter. He jumped round frantically with about as much grace in his movements as a playful cow might show, stopping every now and then to turn his head up sideways, and witness the effect his dancing produced "on the man with the umbrella, who told him to get out." I opened the front door. Contrary to my expectations, he made no rush or scramble to get in first. He stood out on the step with his head cocked sideways, looking up in my eyes, the big tassels waving in time to the wagging of his tail. "Come in, Patience," said I, and in he came. As I opened the vestibule door he required the second invitation, looking, for all the world like a bashful Irishman (?) on which I was about to bestow an old suit of clothes, and, as he followed me through the entry, and I saw him, as it were, counting his steps, I felt sure he held in one of his fore-paws an invisible hat. "Dorothy," said I, as I opened the kitchen door, "give this dog a good washing, something to eat, and then bring him up stairs." And, turning round to my friend, I said to him, "Go in, Patience." In he went. As I closed the door after him, and walked up stairs, I could hear the peals of laughter that greeted his appearance, It's a good thing, thought I, to bring sunlight into a house, 'specially of a stormy November night; for what is joy, laughter, good-natured gaiety but the very best kind of sunlight, that of the heart? That evening, as we all sat reading, sewing, chatting, round the table, the parlour door opened, and in walked Patience. With a keen appreciation of the ludicrous, Dorothy, in washing the dog, had washed the tassels, for she knew the one couldn't be separated from the other, and thus he entered with them rehung about his neck, and an extra sparkle in his eye, resulting from a good supper. "Oh! what a looking-dog," exclaimed Kate, and then burst into a hearty, ringing laugh, joined by Martha, Sally, and cousin Dick, in full chorus. "Where did you get him?" "He's built like a crocodile," said Dick. "He's only one story high," said Kate. "A perfect picture," said Martha. "And cord and tassels to hang him with," chimed in Dick. "He's my friend," said I, "and his name is Patience." Whereupon I waved my hand over his head with great delight, as he stood there modestly waiting a recognition. At the wave of my hand he stood up on his hind legs, walked forward a few steps, rolled his head around, and stood like a sentry on guard. This unexpected performance filled my heart with joy. Louder laughed the merry party. I grew bold, adventurous. I stooped down, held out my arm, and said, "Jump, Patience." Over he went. I threw down my handkerchief: he picked it up and brought it to me. "He's a perfect treasure," said Kate; "make him talk now." "Couldn't think of it," I answered; "not words but deeds with him." And, as Patience lay down at my feet, and watched me with his large eyes, I told them all the way I found him. Then were we all glad that the outcast had found a home, and smiling faces were turned on poor Patience, as he lay at my feet and wagged his tail. Are there no other outcasts standing at night out over the thresholds of our hearts; and if we take them in and treat them kindly, will they not gladden us?—The Knickerbocker, or New York Monthly Magazine.

A Piece of Legal Advice.

The ancient town of Rennes, in France is a place famous for law. To visit Rennes without getting advice of some sort, seems absurd to the country people round about. It happened one day that a farmer named Bernard, having come to this town on business, bethought himself that he had a few hours to spare, it would be well to get the advice of a good lawyer. He had often heard of a lawyer Foy, who was in such high repute that people believed a lawsuit gained when he undertook their cause. The countryman went to the office, and after waiting some time, was admitted to an interview. He told the lawyer that having heard so much about him, and happening to be in town, he thought he would call and consult him.

"You wish to bring an action, perhaps," replied the lawyer.

"O, no," replied the farmer, "I am at peace with all the world."

"Then it is a settlement of property that you want, is it?"

"Excuse me, Mr. Lawyer, my family and I have never made a division, seeing that we draw from the same well, as the saying is."

"It is, then, to get me to negotiate a purchase of a sale that you have come?"

"Oh, no, I am neither rich enough to purchase nor poor enough to sell."

"Will you tell me, then, what you do want of me?" said the lawyer, in a tone of surprise.

"Why, I have already told you, Mr. Lawyer," replied Bernard; "I want your advice. I mean to pay for it, of course."

The lawyer smiled, and taking pen and paper, asked the countryman his name.

"Peter Bernard," replied the countryman, quite happy that the lawyer at length understood what he wanted.

"Your age?"

"Thirty years, or very near it."

"Your vocation?"

"What's that?

"What do you do for a living?"

"Oh! that is what it means, is it?—Why I am a farmer."

The lawyer wrote two lines, folded the paper, and handed it to his client.

"Is it finished already?" said the farmer. "Well and good! What is to be the price of that advice, Mr. Lawyer?"

"Three francs."

Bernard paid the money and took his leave, delighted that he had made use of his opportunity to get a piece of advice from the great lawyer. When the farmer reached home it was 4 o'clock; the journey had fatigued him, and he determined to rest the remainder of the day. Meanwhile the hay had been cut two days, and was completely made. One of his men came and asked him if they should draw in.

"What, this evening?" exclaimed the farmer's wife, who had come to meet her husband "It would be a pity to begin the work so late, since it can be done as well to-morrow."

Bernard was uncertain which way to decide. Suddenly he recollected that he had the lawyer's advice in his pocket.

"Wait a minute," he exclaimed; "I have an advice, and a famous one, too, that I paid three francs for; it ought to tell us what to do. Here, wife, see what it says; you can read written hand better than I." The woman took the paper and read this line,

"Never put off until to-morrow what you can do to-day."

"That's it," exclaimed Bernard, as it a ray of light had cleared up all his doubts.—"Come be quick! get the carts and away! Come boys, come girls—all to the hay field! It shall not be said that I bought a three franc opinion to make no use of it. I will follow the lawyer's advice."

Bernard himself set the example by leading the way to the work, and not returning till the hay was brought in. The event seemed to prove the wisdom of his conduct, and the foresight of the lawyer. The weather changed during the night—an unexpected storm burst over the valley; the next morning, it was found that the river had overflowed and carried away all the hay that had been left in the fields.

The crops of the neighboring farmers were completely destroyed—Bernard alone had not suffered. The success of his first experiment gave him such faith in the advice of the lawyer, that, from that time forth, he adopted it as his rule of conduct, and became, consequently, one of the most prosperous farmers in the country. I hope that my readers will take a hint from his success, and "never put off till-morrow what you can do to-day."—From the French.

The Rum-Trafficker's Sign-Board.

Suppose a man, when about to commence the traffic in ardent spirit, should write in GREAT CAPITALS ON HIS SIGN-BOARD, to be seen and read of all men, what he will do: That so many of the inhabitants of this town or city, he will, for the sake of getting all their money, make paupers, and send them to the almshouse, and thus oblige the whole community to support them and their families; that so many others he will excite to the commission of crimes, and thus increase the expenses and endanger the peace and welfare of the community: that so many he will send to jail, and so many more, to the state prison, and so many to the gallows; that so many he will visit with sore and distressing diseases, and, in so many cases, diseases which would have been comparatively harmless, he will by his poison render fatal; that in so many cases he will deprive persons of reason, and in so many cases will cause sudden death; that so many wives he will make widows, and so many children he will make orphans, and that in so many cases he will cause the children to grow up in ignorance, vice, and crime, and after being nuisances on earth, will bring them to a premature grave; that in so many cases he will prevent the efficacy of the gospel, grieve away the Holy Ghost, and ruin for eternity the souls of men. And suppose he could, and should give some faint conception of what it is to lose the soul, and of the overwhelming guilt and coming wretchedness of him who is knowingly instrumental in producing this ruin; and suppose he should put at the bottom of the sign, this question: What, you may ask, can be my object in acting so much like a devil incarnate, and bringing such accumulated wretchedness upon a comparatively happy people? and under it should put the true answer, MONEY; and go on to say, I have a family to support; I want money, and must have it; this is my business, I was brought up to it; and if I should not follow it, must change my business, or I could not support my family.—And as all faces begin to gather blackness at the approaching ruin, and all hearts to boil with indignation at its author, suppose he should add, for their consolation, "If I do not bring this destruction upon you, somebody else will." What would they think of him? what would all the world think of him? what ought they to think of him? And is it any worse for a man to tell the people beforehand, honestly, what he will do, if they buy and use his poison, than it is to go on and do it? And what if they are not aware of the mischief which he is doing them, and he can accomplish it through their own perverted and voluntary agency, is it not equally abominable, if he knows it and does not cease from producing it?—Memoir of Dr. Edwards.

On Shoeing Horses that Over-reach.

I was bred from my youth a blacksmith and farmer, and whether a natural mechanic or not I was always anxious to know the whys and wherefores of things, or more properly speaking, the casualities and preventatives. I was also fond of trying experiments upon such things as appeared favorable of improvement. I was generally in the shop with my father evenings, rainy days, and such other times as I could be spared from the farm and school. By being in the shop so much, I obtained the views of farmers generally and by that was enabled to make many improvements on the farm. I learned also, that many farmers entertain very erroneous views about black-mithing, (and I might add blacksmiths too;) still they were bound to dictate according to their prejudices; as, for instance, one says: "This horse over-reaches, I want you to put the forward shoes as far forward as possible, and set the hind shoes as far back, or he will tear them off. I would sometimes try to reason the case by saying the way to prevent a horse from over-reaching, is to augment the speed of the forward feet, and retard the motion of the hind one; but in order to accomplish that, I shall have to reverse your directions. Some who had little or no mechanical genius, would cut short all argument, and say, "Follow my directions or else not shoe my horse." Of course, a mechanic must obey orders, if he breaks owners; so the horse would go out the shop, nicely fettered, with his shoes clicking at every step; while, perhaps, the man of inquiry would desire a full explanation. My way is, to make the toe corks very low, and standing a little under, and the shoes set as far back as convenient on the forward feet, with high heel corks so as to let them roll over as soon as possible. On the hind feet, I have the heel-cork low, and the toe-cork high, projecting forward, thus keeping back the hind foot, while coming up over a high toe-cork, giving time for the forward foot to get out of the way. If thus shod, the horse will travel clean, without a click, and his speed will be increased on a trot fifteen or twenty seconds in a mile.—New England Farmer.

A Ghostly Witness.

At Tanna I saw three prisoners standing at the bar who had given a circumstantial confession of a murder, and pointed out the very spot where the bones of the murdered man would be found. These were produced in court; and part of the clothes and the cast thread of the murdered man were identified by his friends and relations. Yet the doctor, my intelligent friend, Dr. Kirk, who accompanied Sir W. Harris to Abyssinia, on examining the bones, ascertained that they belonged to three or four different corpses; and as this incident gave a sort of hitch to the proceedings, and prolonged the trial, the result was, that before it was over, the murdered man himself walked into court, and, it is said, was seen to examine his own bones with infinite curiosity. The story which he told, and which accounted for his remarkable disappearance from his village on the night of the supposed murder, was not the least remarkable part of the tale, and is a good illustration of "Manners in the East." He had been seen last somewhat near the house of the prisoners; and he stated that, as he was going homewards, he met four or five Arab soldiers, who pressed him into their train to carry a bundle, and who made him accompany them for a six weeks' march into the interior, somewhere beyond Poona. When they dismissed him, he was taken ill of fever, and laid some months sick at a village in the Deccan. When, at last, after four months' absence, he got back to his own village, he found that three of his neighbours stood a near chance of being hung, on their own confession, for murdering him. So, like an honest fellow, he made his way to the criminal court, which, lucky for the prisoners, was not above ten miles off. It would seem most probable that the confessions in question had been extorted by the violence of the subordinate native police.—A Bird's-Eye View of India. By Sir Erskine Perry.

IRELAND.

A Novel Mistake and an Agreeable Surprise.

A correspondent, who vouches for its accuracy, has forwarded us the following:—There lives a gentleman in a neighbouring county, who, being a distance from home, some days ago, met with a young woman, who requested him to purchase two gallons of the "mountain dew." He told her that as he was to have some friends at dinner that evening he would take it, provided that she could have it with him at three o'clock the same day; telling her at the same time to be very cautious how she brought it, as there was a party of revenue police in the village. The girl readily agreed to bring the whisky, and told the gentleman not to fear disappointment, trusting that he would be at home to receive it. She then turned her steps homeward, for the purpose of making good her agreement. After having dressed herself neatly, her object was how she should smuggle the whisky. Her plan was soon formed. She took the jar containing the exhilarating beverage, and, dressing it neatly in baby's clothing, placed it in a reclining position in her arms, with its face, of course, turned towards her bosom, and proceeded direct to the village. Having no other way of reaching the gentleman's residence than by passing the revenue barrack, and knowing she must have it delivered at the appointed hour, she summoned all her resolution to pass that dreadful house, come what might. When nearly opposite the barrack, one of the revenue men came out; she stepped forward to him, and (giving the child two or three hugs) inquired if he could show her the house in which Mr——resided. The keen-eyed revenue man very kindly pointed to the door, and the girl walked on, reached the hall door, and rapped, expecting to meet the master, as per agreement. However, to her surprise, Mrs——appeared at the door, and demanded to know her business. The agitated girl replied that she merely wanted to see the master. "What is your business?" peremptorily repeated the lady. "Well," said the girl, "since you must know, my business is to leave this child with him?" The lady, upon hearing this, seized the poor girl by the shoulders, and, without any aid, thrust her from the door, and shut it against her. The gentleman, who had been convenient, on hearing the noise, hurried forward to ascertain the cause. He saw the girl from the window, and without any ceremony went out and brought her into the parlour where his lady was, and in the presence of both took the baby in his arms to divest it of its hood and shawl, displaying its figure to Mrs——, who was not a little overjoyed when she discovered that it was nothing more dangerous than a "jar of poteen."—Irish Paper.

Our Canadian Colonies.

It is but ninety-six years since Wolfe mounted the heights of Abraham; four years before Canada was formally ceded to England by the treaty of Paris in 1763. The colonial population was then exclusively French, who were settled, in number about 70,000, in the lower province. They were governed by military authority—the tenure of land and civil relations being regulated in accordance with the French feudal law and the system called the Custom of Paris. The land was held in large tracts, under grants from the Crown, by seigneurs or lords of manors, who were bound to sub-grant specified portions to censitairs, or tenants, who were in turn required to render certain services and tributes to their lords. Under this system, which has endured for a hundred and fifty years, a copy of the rural society of France, as it existed in the seventeenth century, was produced and maintained in the original simplicity of its most amiable features, and scarcely disturbed by the spirit of progress: whether for good or evil. The seigneurs were stately, gallant, and polite; the habitans, or peasants, frugal and industrious—all were hospitable, courteous, honest, and ignorant. Together they formed a community cheerful and happy, but in a remarkable degree tenacious of old customs, and averse to change of place or habits. For eleven years after the cession, Canada was governed as a Crown colony by an English governor and council, according to English law, administered in the English language only. In the year 1774, when the troubles in the adjoining colonies warned the home Government of the prudence of securing friends among the provincialists, a legislative council was given to Canada, the French law was again established in all civil matters, and the use of the French language was resumed in the law courts and in public transactions. The American revolution caused a great change in the Canadian population: a large influx of people of the Anglo-Saxon race, American loyalists, took place, and these being reinforced by emigration from the United Kingdom, chiefly of Scotch and Irish, an English nation altogether distinct from the Nation Canadienne was speedily formed. The spirit of industry and progress, and the desire for self-government, entered along with the new comers, who settled chiefly in the upper or western districts, which the original colonists never attempted to occupy. The privileges of a free British colony, were, of course, soon demanded; and in 1791 the territory was divided into the provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, and constitutions upon the colonial model then in vogue were granted to each. A governor or lieutenant-governor, and executive council represented the Crown; while lords and commons were mimicked in a nominative legislative council and representative assembly. It may be easily conceived that this machinery could work but poorly in the lower province, where the French settlers still clung to the customs of their ancient country, and, viewing their new compatriots as intruders, hated them and their novel privileges, which they neither comprehended nor admired. Among the Anglo-Saxon population the acquirement of a government popular in form naturally led to a demand for the reality of popular power;—"The assembly (says Lord Durham in his celebrated report) were in a state of continuous warfare with the executive, for the purpose of obtaining the powers inherent to a representative body, by the very nature of representative government;" and the warfare was carried on in the old English method, by struggles for the power of the purse. A curious co-operation, without sympathy or combination, then took place between the two provincial nations. The small class of educated men among the habitans—most of them village surgeons or notaries—began to feel the corrupting influence, even though they knew not the nobler uses, of liberty. They grew quickly into a caste of demagogues possessed of absolute control over the simple rustics among whom they lived, and whose ignorance of the English language placed them at the mercy of their leaders for any exposition of the policy of the home Government it might please them to afford. Thus the Nation Canadienne fought against the same foe, without using the same flag, as the Anglo-Saxon demagogues; and as both, unfortunately, had many real grievances to set in front of their battle, a violent and protracted agitation was begun, which in the year 1837, waxed into a rebellion A suppression of this outbreak by the strong hand, and a suspension of the constitution followed, the occurrence of those events being fortunately productive of a large increase of the knowledge of all parties. The habitans were taught the power of England, and the selfishness and pusillanimity of their own leaders; the mass of British settlers came to know—perhaps to form an exaggerate estimate of—their importance as defenders of the British connection; the American sympathisers and annexationists were made acquainted with the total absence of sympathy between themselves and all classes of the colonial population; the home Government had learned the wisdom the separation of the United States had failed to teach them—of frank and early concessions of claims that in the long run cannot be withstood. After two years of contention and anxious deliberation, the two Canadas were united, in 1839, in one province for the purpose of executive Government and Legislature, and the constitution was restored in the shape in which it now exists.—The Rail in Canada.

The Extraordinary Poisoning Case in England—Frauds on the Life Insurance Companies.

The revelations in the London Times, the Liverpool Journal, and other English papers, of the crimes supposed to be committed by Dr. Palmer, a surgeon and gentleman of the fancy, are causing a high degree of excitement in that country. The facts were first made public at a Coroner's inquest, held at Rugeley, on the body of J. Parsons Cooke, a sporting man, and owner of the famous racer Polar Star. The investigation showed that Palmer had entered into heavy bets with Cooke, by which he feared that he would be a loser. Either with the object of wiping out this debt—death cancelling by the laws of the turf in England all existing bets and past losses—or with a view of possessing himself of a sum of £1,000, which Mr. Cooke had won at Shrewsbury race, and carried about with him, and which was missing on his decease, or with both purposes, as it is most probable, Palmer, the accusation is, commenced to subject him to a course of poisoning which terminated in his death. The circumstances under which his sudden death took place, the mysterious disappearance of his betting book, which he invariably carried about his person, and the absence of the £1,000 he was known to have had on entering the house where he was last seen in company with Palmer, and where he was dragged, fixed suspicion on Palmer as the murderer, and he was arrested. Case on case has since risen up in cumulative horror, surpassing in terrible darkness of incident anything the annals of crime for several centuries unfold. Palmer entered on the turf some years since, and became a loser beyond his means. In those straits he adopted the course usually resorted to by men on the turf, and had recourse to a notorious bill discounter, in Queen Street, Mayfair, by the name of Pratt. The debt, whatever it was, doubtless doubled or trebled in a year or two, Pratt's usual rate of interest being about 120 per cent. In this sinking condition, catching recklessly at every means of escape, and possibly, as it now appears, having committed forgery to extricate himself in the last effort of escape from his difficulties, or the consequences of his crime, some such horrible idea as that he has since carried out stole on his senses. The first victim appears to have been the mother of his wife, upon whose death he came in by right of his wife, for a considerable sum. Four days after coming to reside at his house she died.

The next victim was a Mr. Duffy, a commercial traveller, with whom he had business transactions, and who is supposed to have been buried in a well in Palmer's garden. The next was his own wife, who, when a ward with considerable fortune, had married him against the desire of her connections, and whose life had, previous to the perpetration of his crime, been insured for £13,000 in three different English offices. After his wife followed his brother, whose life he insured in different offices for £23,450. On the occasion of the first two deaths, he contrived to elude the suspicion of either his own relatives or the public: but the death of his brother following so close upon that of his wife, naturally aroused a suspicion which a proposal to insure the life of his servant, one Bates, for no less a sum than £35,000, naturally increased, and a few days before his arrest for the murder of Cooke, they had, after inquiry, declined to pay over the amount.

It has since turned out that the usurer, Pratt, received the amount of Mrs. Palmer's insurance, and would have received the greater part of that on William Palmer, had it been paid. Since Palmer's committal, Pratt has presented to his mother, a lady of some fortune, bills to the amount of £20,000, to which her name had been forged by Palmer, and which he, doubtless with the knowledge of the fact, had cashed, in the confidence that on that account they were more valuable, as forcing Palmer to stop at no crime in taking them up. For the rest there are rumors which ascribe to Palmer the death of Lord George Bentinck and others, but they are merely those wild exaggerations which always springs out of such events.

The bodies of both the wife and brother have been exhumed. Although the result of Dr. Taylor's analysis has not yet officially transpired, it is known that he has discovered antimony in considerable quantities in the stomach and viscera of Mrs. Palmer, and also arsenic: but the quantity of the latter is not sufficient to justify the suspicion that death was caused by its agency—arsenic being found in more or less quantity, in almost every substance.—Strychnine, or some other vegetable preparation, is supposed to have been the means employed. It is somewhat curious that the accused had a fast horse, that figured conspicuously in his turf speculations, and bore the name of "Strychnine."

Since the committal of Palmer to Stafford jail no one had been permitted to communicate with him. He is reserved in manner, and two turnkeys are with him night and day, to prevent him from committing self-destruction. On his first admission to the prison he refused all food, taking soda-water only, and expressing his determination to starve himself. On the eighth day after his incarceration, the medical officers of the prison had a consultation on his case, and resolved to give him food by the medium of the stomach pump, if all persuasive measures failed. When Palmer was informed of this determination, he yielded, and has since taken the food ordered by the surgeon.

Cunning of a Murdered Man.

Mr. Reade, the commissioner of Benares, told me the following story. When he was collecter at Gorakpur, he one day visited the jail, and happened to ask a prisoner what he was there for. The man smiled, and said, "Murder." Reade replied that murder was no joking matter; on which the man said, "Yes, but I am not guilty; and what is more, the man is alive now." There was something in the man's manner which made Mr. Reade inquire particularly into the case; and the story told him was, that the party supposed to be murdered, who was a barkandaz of police, had an intrigue with the wife of the prisoner's brother, upon which the prisoner and his three brothers laid a plot to waylay him one night, and give him a good drubbing. They did so accordingly, and the policeman either fell, or was thrown by them, into a river, by the side of which they had been waylaying him. The man being missing, and suspicion being strong against the four brothers, it was agreed amongst themselves that, as harvest-time was near, the prisoner should take the crime entirely on his own shoulders, and so get the others liberated. He did so, admitted the murder, and of course was found guilty; but probably on the score of the corpse not being found, was sentenced only to imprisonment for life, and a pension was given to the family of the murdered policeman. This story was told with such vraisimilitude, that Reade made a careful inquiry into the whole, and found every word of it true; and after much trouble, discovered the policeman hundreds of miles off, acting as a peon at the Court of Nagpore, glad to think that his family, in the meantime, had been well provided for at Gorakpur, by a pension from government for his supposed death. The rogue had no doubt kept purposely out of the way, in order to secure this provision for his family.

Dangerous Eating—Poisonous Birds.

Any person going through the markets may notice the large amount of pheasants exhibited for sale. They should beware, however, of purchasing them, for they are no more fit to eat than so much poison. The bird is not only out of season, but the recent snow storm has deprived it of its ordinary food, and it now has to resort to anything it can procure, generally the leaves of evergreen trees, and bushes, some of them rank poison. An individual will eat a pheasant for supper, and congestion of the brain will ensue, or he will suddenly fall dead, and the Coroner's verdict will be apoplexy. A whole family will be taken sick, and, unless the peculiar habits of the pheasant are known, they will seek in vain for the cause. Death frequently happens in this way. During the British occupation of Philadelphia, when the officers indulged themselves in pheasant shooting on Wissahickon Heights, seven persons were poisoned at the supper succeeding the sport. The bird, unable on account of the depth of the snow to find his natural food, was compelled to feed on the buds and leaves of the laurel, (Kalmia Latifolia.) Death ensued. A scientific friend has just exhibited to us the crop and intestines, with the body of a pheasant, weighing 1 lb. 14½ oz. The crop and stomach were crammed with half decomposed laurel. One pair of such birds might render a family helpless for weeks, if not poison them to death.—Ledger.

I'm a woman, with a woman's weakness, and having a good constitution, can bear a great deal of happiness! If I was asked my idea of perfect bliss, I should say "a fast horse, a duck of a cutter, plenty Buffalo robes, a neat fitting over coat with a handsome man in it, and—and one of Madame Walsh's little French bonnets. If that wouldn't be happiness for one life time, I'm open to conviction as to what would!"—Lady Cor. Boston Post.

The Ladies' Law of Leap Year.

It may, perhaps, be interesting to all young ladies who are not already aware of the important fact, that leap year empowers them to do something more than "pop the question." I am informed by a fair friend, that if in the course of the year of 1856—which is leap year—she should so far forget herself as to suggest a union between herself and a bachelor acquaintance, who should be uncivil enough to decline her proposal, she could, thereupon, demand from him the gift of a new silk dress. But, to claim this dress with propriety, she must, at the time of asking, be the wearer of a scarlet petticoat; which, or the lower portion of which, she must exhibit to the gentleman, who, by the law of the leap year, is compelled to present to the lady the dress that shall cover the petticoat, and assauge her displeasure at the rejection of her proposals. This item of feminine folk lore may prove exceedingly useful to the male readers of "Notes and Queries," in putting them upon their guard during leap year; for it is not, probably, without a determined significancy that the wearing of scarlet petticoats is made one of the chief novelties in ladies dresses for this winter season. Indeed, it may reasonably be inferred that the ladies' law of leap year is about to be inflicted upon the gentlemen in its most expensive silk-dress form; and that the assumption of these scarlet petticoats is merely the initiatory step to a sterner process.—Notes and Queries.

The Danger of Burying too Soon.

The danger of too rapid interment was exemplified in a very extraordinary manner recently, according to one of our exchanges. A young man who had been suffering from a malignant fever, to all appearance died. To avoid the danger of infection which might arise from a corpse remaining in the house all night, a coffin was immediately commenced, the certificate of death sent for, and urgent application was made to the incumbent of a church to allow the corpse to be interred the same evening. This, however, he declined, considering the proceeding too hasty, but consented to the interment taking place the following morning. The result proved the propriety of the delay; the grave was dug, and the coffin ready, but the dead man in the course of the night, gave signs of returning animation; and at the hour fixed for his burial was in the comfortable enjoyment of a cup of coffee, which he had requested, with every prospect of recovery.—Prototype.

The following letter was promised to our readers a long time since, but was unavoidably set aside at the time, and is published now from the desire to fulfil the first promise, and to give a more correct impression of colored Americans in the United States, and especially of those in the places designated, than has hitherto been given to our Canadian readers through such a medium:

The Canadian Refugees' own Narrative,
by Benjamin Drew.

Since the great pecuniary profit to the authoress and publishers of Uncle Tom's Cabin, numerous aspirants for fame and "tin" have been, and are actively employed in getting up, "producing," and multiplying works, in some way or other, relating to colored people; and so swelling the bulk of what is now known as "Fugitive Literature."

Some have said Uncle Tom's Cabin does not suit them,—especially those liable to a doubt of originality in themselves,—and that a third to be indisputable, should be fresh and unvarnished (that is the term) for the fugitives themselves. Others see in such productions, a ready sale; and that quick profits are to be realized from the well-filled purses of a sympathizing public. Latterly, the colored people of these Provinces have been visited by women and men, not a few, who, looking forward to the recompense, and who thinking—

"'Tis pleasant sure, to see one's name in print,
A book's a book, although there's nothing in't," scruple not to wander in and out, and in the name, without much claim to the pure spirit of philanthropy, as their publications show, unless such proceedings can be justified on the principle that man may do evil that good may come; visit people, colored and white, making their intention known to the latter, but generally keeping from the fugitives their design to scatter broadcast their conversations, names, and residences. The whole proceeding is reprehensible in the highest degree, and we are satisfied is most unpleasant to the fugitives themselves.

As earnestly as we hope to see, and work for the overthrow of American Slavery, we would most emphatically condemn a resort to such modes to effect it, even could publishers and others, interested in the sale of such books, convince us that nothing but the most disinterested generosity prompted the motive; a cause that must resort to such means for support, in view of the common sense and common usage of society, must be in a sad plight. But we do not believe it.

The sinfulness of American Slavery is too evident; does not need Mr. Drew's book, Mrs. Knox's long-looked for one of the "same sort," with their detail of names in full, residences, and wholesale voluntaries, by the authors themselves, or by parties in Canada interested; of the great benefactors of the fugitives, Hiram Wilson and Lady; of the British American Institute at Dawn; of the great work of Messrs. Scoble and Henson; the former of the two being, we are told, the party who holds the Dawn by "lease and re-lease; and the puff of the Refugees' Home," looking for all the world as if that had been added by C. C. Foote, of Detroit, or some other brother who gets twenty-five per cent of the thousands begged.

We challenge Mr. Drew, and the whole company, to get, first, from any number of respectable fugitives in St. Catharines, or in Canada, an endorsement of his statement regarding the great need of the Hiram Wilson Mission. He nor any other living man can do it!!! The whole affair is a grand deception, and has been from the beginning, and if he or friends dispute the point, we will volunteer to have our statement confirmed by the fugitives of the place, en masse, the influential among whom have not only urged us, from time to time, to publish the true state of things, but who, when they can get a friend far enough away from the coat skirts of the missionary(?) to prevent his personal influence, as a white man with white men, from weighing down their facts, by his bare assertions, are ready to say so, and glad to do the same for their own personal and collective interests.

Where, we would like to know, of Mr. Drew, can he or any one else find such a thing as the British American Institute? No such institute exists, and he well knew it if he knew anything about it,—neither would he get from any fugitive in Canada, of veracity, an endorsement of his statement respecting the Scoble and Henson efforts—it is very strange that his book should support in detail, those men and measures, that the fugitives as one man condemned, through the papers of the United States, as well as Canada, and can only be reconciled, on the probability of a direct understanding between the author and those men in this country, known to the fugitives as their enemies only
